Oswego.

OSWEGO, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1872.

Sacred history informs us that Canaan was a land flowing with milk and honey, and my skepticism that we may have felt in years gone by with regard to such incomprehensible generosity on the part of Dame Nature, has long ago been set at rest by the bubbling oil wells of Pennsylvania. To use the cant phrase of the day, Ourfaith has been confirmed. Led away, perhaps, by the stories of these accounts of agricultural productiveness of Canaan, I have always regarded Oswego as a land of starch. But this portion of my worthly creed has suddenly received a decidedly rough and ready shaking up. For years and years "Oswego Starch" has stared me in the face from the shop window of every grocery in every city, in both the old and the new worlds. My blanchisseuse in Paris has startled and again assured me, in her splendidly broken English, that she used none but "ediyche d'Oscego" in getting up my shirt collars; my laundress in the Temple was equally emphatic, but I fear less truthful, and deceitfully palmed off an inferior article upon my innocent shirt bosoms. But then, poor woman! she had so many little laundresses to support that she had no soul left for fine linen. At half sixpence and upwards (inclusive) "corn starch," years ago, banished bless manger from my category of "things not to be eaten on any account." In fact, my preconception of Oswego, and my intimate acquaintance with starch, formed a sort of web and woof so thoroughly interwoven that I believe I really thought that Oswego grew starch, or was a mine of starch, or was built of starch, or, at all events, knew nothing but starch. But as we grow older we grow wiser, and today I am enlightened. Figaro thought that, having mastered a tolerably correct pronunciation of the word dons, the English language was on the tips of his tongue. To me Oswego and starch were synonymous words. Figaro and I were both wrong. Allowing unconceived Figaro, Oswego herself put my ideas on the right track. The Anglo-Saxon tongue is not confined to sweating, and, though the Oswego Starch Works are stupendous and marvelous in themselves, and supply the greater part of the stiff-necked and stiff-petticoated world with a starch which would be a blessing to a Norman peasant girl for her Sunday caps, if she could only raise the few sous necessary to procure a small package of it—they are not Oswego—they are only a very important part of it.

Oswego is one of the nicest cities in the State. It lies on either side of the mouth of the Oswego River, which, for the last mile of its course, flows in a straight line, at right angles with Lake Ontario. From the lake shore the town is built on a steep incline, so that in the upper part the bridges over the river, of which there are several, need no rise whatever from the level of the road. Fine, broad main streets run parallel with the river to the lake, and the cross streets are equally broad and well laid out. Oswego, too, boasts some public works of more than average respectability. Being a port of entry she has, of course, a custom-house; and in the public square, on Main-street, a fine Ohio stone building has been erected by the Government, which also furnishes ample accommodation for the post-office and the United States Courts, a public library, an orphan asylum and a jail. In the same square a really handsome and most substantially constructed City Hall has just been completed. It is built of Onondaga grey lime stone, and cost $190,000. And this for a city so young that the first President of the former village of Oswego, Mr. ALVIN BRONSON, is still alive—a hale, hearty, and active old man.

The Oswego River drains a tract of country of about seven thousand square miles in extent, and is the outlet of no less than eleven lakes clustering in central New-York, among which are Lakes Oneida, Seneca, Cayuga, Canandaigua, Skaneateles and Onondaga. It is estimated by the State Engineers that the flow of the Oswego stream in ordinary high water is about twelve thousand cubic feet per second, and that in extreme low water it is never less than two thousand cubic feet per second. It is very rarely that it falls below twenty-five hundred feet. Here is a splendid water-power, and for a lake port, too, which is a leading grain market. The two falls in the city are calculated to be equivalent to twelve thousand horse power—sufficient for some six hundred run of stone of flouring-mills. Such a water-power is a great and valuable hydraulic privilege to the city.

Of course, a great grain port like Oswego does not allow this vast water power to lie idle. Along the banks of the river there are no less than fourteen flouring-mills, with seventy-three run of stone, and an aggregate capacity of grinding 3,840 barrels of flour a day. And, in addition to this, there are five mills at Fulton, about twelve miles up the river, with thirty-four run of stone, and a capacity of 2,720 barrels of flour a day. Those who know anything about flouring-mills, especially mills located in districts where the Winter is severe, are aware that the annual product of a mill must not be calculated by its capacity. No flouring-mills work all the year round; and when the receipts of grain from the lake ports and the shipments of flour by canal are confined to eight months in the year, it stands to reason that the miller's year must go "short and quick, like a donkey's gallop." The average product of the flouring-mills within the bounds of the City of Oswego, that is excluding Fulton, is about 600,000 barrels a year. The following list of the various mills, the number of their runs of stone, and their capacities, at Oswego and Fulton, is as nearly correct as possible:

The principal branch of flour manufacture [illegible]

[illegible] sold in the Oswego market are No. 1 Milwaukee clubs, white Michigan, amber Michigan, amber Indiana, and white Canada. The flour finds a ready market all through the State of New-York, the City of New-York, the New-England States, and in Northern and Eastern Pennsylvania.

But this large flouring business, flourish as it is and undoubtedly is, by the splendid water-power of the Oswego River, draws its life-blood from the Oswego grain trade. The grain dealers of Oswego claim, and their evidence seems very specious arguments to support their claim, that Oswego should be the Buffalo of New-York State. It does not come within my province to discuss this question. I prefer to speak of the large grain trade of Oswego, without comparing it with that of Buffalo. There are nine leading dealers in grain in Oswego. SWAN & STORING, who received last year 2,105,105 bushels of wheat, corn, &c., and 1,320,328 bushels of Canada barley; FARLING & RUNDELL, whose total receipts were 1,462,909 bushels; FARLING & RUNDELL are also partners with WHEELER, FOSS & Co. in the Atlas Flouring Mills, which mills are celebrated all over the State for a brand of remarkably fine flour, always commanding an advance on the market prices in general. Their grain elevator, near the harbor, was burnt down about a year ago, but they have buried one close at hand. Their flouring-mills, besides having grain in the Oswego market, receive considerable supplies directly consigned to them. The receipts of Mr. MERRITT, who handles large amounts of grain for Jesse HOYT, of New-York City, were 1,558,016 bushels. HAGAMAN & MURDOCK, C. ADAMS & Co. do an equally large business, and HOWAT, LATHROP & Co., AMES, HASTINGS & Co. and C. C. MORTON are also large receivers. W. H. HERRICK is another of the leading dealers, especially in Canada barley, his receipts of which alone last year were 1,268,000. The aggregate receipts for 1871 of all the dealers were: Wheat, 6,766,364 bushels; corn, 2,472,616 bushels; barley, 3,822,396 bushels; rye, 24,638 bushels, and peas, 220,480; total, 14,160,612 bushels. The following table will show where nearly the whole of this supply came from:

From	Wheat.	Corn.	Barley.
Chicago	718,848	2,371,000	231,000
Milwaukee	1,840,797	29,440	29,000
Duluth	23,000
Sheboygan	5,472
Detroit	1,097,728
Toledo	1,616,000	1,240,397
Cleveland	370,000
Sandusky	1,000,016
Lake Shore	344,000		31,400
Canada	876,140		3,200,000
Total	6,766,364	3,472,616	3,822,396

The last item in this table shows that Oswego is the largest barley market in the United States outside of New-York City. The supply comes almost wholly from ports all along the Canada shore of Lake Ontario. Very little malting is done in Oswego, and the bulk of the arrivals are shipped by canal to Albany, New-York and Philadelphia.

There are ten grain elevators in Oswego, all of which the grain dealers either own or have a part interest in. The North-western, owned by IRWIN & STORING, has a storage capacity of 450,000 bushels. Then there are the Continental, 225,000 bushels; Corn Exchange, 220,000 bushels; Washington, 200,000 bushels; Columbia, 200,000 bushels; Merchants', 220,000 bushels; Marine, 150,000 bushels; Reciprocity, 130,000 bushels; Lake Ontario, 100,000 bushels; and Empire, 90,000 bushels. Total storage capacity, 3,085,000 bushels. The business of these elevators, which have no auxiliary steam-power, was considerably interfered with last year by the excessive drouth which prevailed for about four months. The same adverse influence also affected the flouring business. Some of the elevators and mills remained almost idle for a time; and, as it was the first time that so great a drouth had occurred, it is difficult to arrive at any relative estimates of the ordinary business of the various firms. Still, the receipts of Oswego in 1871 were 2,000,000 bushels in excess of those of 1870.

But in addition to this large grain trade Oswego receives vast amounts of lumber, coal and salt. The bulk of the lumber comes from Canada. The Canadian receipts for last year were 224,000,000 feet, while those from Michigan and other places were only 8,000,000 feet. The lumber trade of Oswego was originated five and twenty years ago by Simeon Baker, who afterward went into partnership with PRESCOTT H. SMITH. This latter gentleman's son, having married a daughter of Baker, succeeded to the business, and connected with him in it JOHN E. POST, and for some years, till the 1st January last, SMITH & POST were the great lumber dealers of Oswego; often carrying as much as 80,000,000 feet of lumber in a year. After them came such men as D. L. COGGIN, whose sales of lumber last year amounted to $0,100,000 feet; O. M. POND & Co., L. A. CURR, R. W. RATHBUN & Co., J. P. WETMORE, E. L. & S. THOMPSON, PAGE, CLARK & Co., and GEO. B. POWELL. The direct sales of lumber in Oswego are largely increasing; and boat-loads are now shipped off, to order, to New-Jersey, Philadelphia, Connecticut, Albany and New-York.

Salt and coal come over the Oswego Canal from Syracuse for shipment by lake. The receipts of salt for 1871 were 114,966,108 pounds; and of coal, 173,000 tons.

This coal business is very great. The total tonnage shipped and received last year was 973,366 tons; valued at $28,365,413.

But in these days of Custom-house discussions it may be interesting to see what Oswego contributes to the national purse. No less than 2,268 vessels were registered as arriving from foreign ports in the harbor of Oswego in 1871. The large sum of $2,324,728 41 was the total of the duties collected and secured; the collections being, gold, $59 11, and the securements, for shipments passing through in bond and collected at other ports, $297,063 30. Nearly the whole of these duties were levied on lumber, barley and wheat; lumber about two-thirds of the gross amount. No wonder that Oswego has a fine Custom-house.

But, about these great Oswego starch works. In the year 1840, Mr. THOMAS KINGSFORD, an Englishman, in the employ of COLGATE & Co., the well-known soap manufacturers, but who were then largely engaged in the manufacture of starch, discovered a chemical process which upset the long-acquiesced-in theory that starch could not be made from Indian corn. This discovery brought about a complete revolution in the manufacture of starch. Failing to interest COLGATE & Co. in his process, Mr. KINGSFORD commenced business on his own account in Jersey City, where he met himself [illegible] at Oswego, where the water-power was abundant, and the water superior for the purpose of making starch to that in Jersey City. He accepted the invitation, while stipulating that he should retain for himself and his heirs the sole and uninterrupted control of his process, and the company was incorporated under the name of the Oswego Starch Factory. From the beginning the business was highly successful, and soon began to grow rapidly till it assumed gigantic proportions. But Mr. KINGSFORD, in spite of wealth and increasing years, or, if it only are, was the only person who knew anything to do with the compounding of the chemicals in which is constituted the secret of the process. Mr. KINGSFORD died two years ago, and his son, THEODORE KINGSFORD, is now the sole depositary of his father's invaluable discovery.

Housekeepers who only know the delicate white odorless crystals of starch which they use in the laundry or make into puddings, would wonder how it is ever produced from the nasty, stinking meal from which it is made. The corn is soaked in water till it is swollen almost into a pulp, and has become so thoroughly scented that the odor from it is nauseating. It is ground when wet, passed through screens and sieves, and then pumped to the upper floor, preparatory to its passage through the mysterious chemical room. To this Blue Beard chamber Mr. KINGSFORD retires every morning, and, having secured himself against intrusion, proceeds like some alchemist of old to compound his chemical concoctions, and to infuse them into the vast starch pots. On leaving the chemical room, the mixture is forced from story to story into enormous vats, where it is constantly stirred and washed with fresh alkaline water. When every impurity has been thoroughly removed, the starch is allowed to settle and harden in long troughs. When taken out of these troughs it resembles enormous bars of the finest and purest white soap. It is, however, brittle, and easily breaks off into solid blocks, nine or ten inches square. It is still, however, far from dry, and also has to be crystallized. The crystallization is the natural effect or exposure to intense heat in ovens. The blocks are packed separately in sheets of thick blue paper, and placed on shelves in the ovens, which are heated by hot air up to 170 degrees. To prevent the escape of the hot air, each oven goes straight up to the roof, the only entrance to it being the door on the ground floor. Shelves about eighteen inches apart rise from the floor to the roof on either side of the oven, and every day a fresh oven is filled with fresh packages of starch. When an oven is being filled or emptied, the workmen are compelled to strip to the skin, otherwise they could not bear the suffocating heat. It is precisely like being in a Turkish bath. After the starch has remained in the ovens several days, it is unpacked, and the men tumble it out of the blue papers into the packing bins. As it falls from the paper it breaks into a thousand and one crystals, and is ready to be put in boxes and sent to market.

It is impossible in any limited space to give anything like a full description of these stupendous works, or of the magnitude of the business carried on in them. But a few figures will convey some idea of what the Oswego Starch Factory is. The buildings are all nearly fire-proof, being built of stone, brick and iron, while the floorings, cisterns and guterings are all so thoroughly saturated with starch-water, that it would be almost impossible for them to burn. The buildings, which occupy a depth of 300 feet between the road and the Oswego River, are 600 feet long, and in many parts seven stories in height. A splendid new building of four floors, 210 feet by 117, and built of stone, is now nearly completed. Altogether the factory has between twelve and thirteen acres of flooring. The corn is ground and pulped by twenty gates of Blue stones unlike large iron rollers. There are 600 cisterns and vats, with an aggregate capacity of 4,000,000 gallons for the liquid starch, which is forced from one place to another by forty force-pumps through three miles of wooden guterings. The machinery of the buildings is worked by 18,000 feet of shafting and 2,000 gear wheels, driven by sixteen turbine water-wheels of fifty horse-power each, and auxiliary steam-engines of 500 horse-power. In the ovens and kilns, where the starch is dried, there are 30 lots that twenty-five miles of steam-pipe in the heating of which 4,500 tons of coal is annually consumed. There are also nearly four miles of water-pipe on the premises, varying from two to sixteen inches in diameter. The works employ about 600 men, and turn out nearly thirty tons of stock a day. All the wooden and paper boxes are manufactured at home, and the making of this enormous annual production of starch uses up 350,000 pounds of paper and 4,000,000 feet of lumber. Mr. KINGSFORD buys nearly all his corn direct from the Western growers, his annual consumption being about 600,000 bushels.

The great secret of Mr. KINGSFORD's success is the furnishing to the consumer an unequaled article of fair market price. The paramount merit of the Oswego starch is its marvelous purity, it having been proved by careful analysis made by the most eminent chemists, that it contains no less than 99.1,000 or pure starch. No wonder that it has secured such a world-wide reputation and use. A. P.

FORT JERVIS, Friday, Feb. 9, 1872.

The work of tunneling HAWK'S Mountain, in Sullivan County, for the New-York and Western Midland Railroad, is a heavy undertaking. The mountain has encountered as yet nothing more formidable than earth, and the work is attended with great danger from caving. The tunnel is to be built for two tracks. It will have to be supported with heavy timbers and stoned. A row of strong, upright timbers is to be placed at closely together as they can be set in the middle of the tunnel, a track to be laid on each side. The sides will be timbered and the roof secured by heavy horizontal pieces upon the uprights. About fifty feet have been excavated at each side of the mountain. It is to be completed in eight months.

A company has been organized under the title of the "New-York Western Midland Railroad Company," composed of leading railroad men in this State, for the purpose of building a railroad from Hancock, Delaware County, connecting with the Erie and New-York and Oswego Railroad Companies, through Deposit, Owego, Cortlandville, Cortland, Homer, Skaneateles and the central counties, to connect with the Ontario Lake Shore Railroad. It will cost, and will take a year and a half to do it. Here, also, will be a tunnel to be built, but it will be of much shorter length than that at Hawk's Mountain.

The Necessities of New-York and How to Meet Them.

BY MONCRAVEN.

CHAPTER III.

After a long-continued effort, always unsuccessful while urged by men of disinterested purpose, but at once victorious when a corrupt and corrupt purchase in securing patronage and profit, we have some hope of legislation for the improvement of water fronts of the City. With a few amendments and honest administration, this legislation will give the City respectable and convenient accommodations for the obvious wants of commerce. But, like most of our Municipal legislation, it has supreme regard to material prosperity, and to the demands of the rich and the educated. It overlooks the not less important claims of the poor, the ignorant, and the tempted portions of the people. It is a fine thing to have massive, convenient, and durable docks, piers in harmony with the increasing wealth and splendor, and for the uses of the growing commerce of a great cosmopolitan City. Let us be grateful, too, that the reign of Municipal shabbiness has been succeeded by a policy which has developed even for wealth and commerce respectable quarters. But do not let us be so blind as not to see that the spirit of this legislation, and the aim of the work being done under it, are far below what our safety and our duty demand of us. Commercial prosperity and the vast wealth in New-York City are secured. Nature almost made these certain. Of works of material splendor she will have no lack. Her peril is in the condition of her neglected, laboring poor and her vicious, ignorant, bigoted foreign importations, propagating generations like themselves, uncared for in her tenement-houses and cellars. It is bad enough that there seems to be an inevitable tendency in the life of vast cities to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, to beget cold, selfish pride in the houses of wealth and elegance, and suspicious and hopeless debasement in the homes of poverty and ignorance. Two widely separated classes are thus caused to stand both against each other with little mutual sympathy and little common effort or intercourse. Both classes vote, and while the power of numbers is with one, the influence of property is, of course, mostly with the other. City government has of late shifted from one to the other of these rival and jealous forces, and legislation has not been in the common interest of both. The Docks and Pier Commission and administration seem to be in the interest of wealth and education alone. They do nothing and propose nothing for the honest poor. It will be as little to the credit of the political sagacity as it will be to the benevolence of New-York, if only strong and stately erections shall rise along her water fronts to shelter the bales and boxes, and accommodate the ships of its princely merchants, while the innumerable poor voters who work near these fronts are left as badly exposed as now, to the extremes of weather and extremes of vice. Not any proposed erection of comfort for them illustrates any public appreciation that it is a far greater public peril to have thousands of disaffected, intemperate and ignorant laborers than it is to save a few moistened cotton bales and a few rickety pier-heads. It is time the honest elements in both the extremes of city life co-operated and sympathized together. Never was there a better time than now to inaugurate such a union, and enact laws that shall illustrate its spirit.

There is no subject more appropriate for an application than these water-fronts. The long, narrow island on which the City is built will have its fine houses and fine stores along the centre; the homes of the poor will be toward the borders, and the seats of commercial activity will be on the water front, where the poor man and the rich man, each in his own way, will labor together. These water-fronts should not be improved for the convenience and taste of the rich alone, but for the comfort and improvement of the respectable poor as well. It will not do to say that the rich pay the taxes and therefore may expend them in their own way. They have a far greater stake than they now appear to appreciate in raising their ignorant and vicious fellow-citizens from their low condition. Regarded as a financial problem alone, I maintain that the policy I commend is as much less for the pecuniary interest of the rich than it is in the interest of their abiding comfort and security. It is strange that men who constantly grumble about excessive taxes and bad measures, imposed by bad officers elected by the ignorant and the vicious, have not more sensible ideas about the sources of such evils, and have not yet learned that the wisdom from a poisonous fountain are not purified by change in the tables that bring them to our houses. Let me suggest the kind of water-front improvements that these views require to be added:

First—They suggest that at convenient places along the water-front there should be provided adequate bathing-houses for both sexes, where, under suitable regulations, free, or nearly free, cold or fresh-water baths may always be had. It should also be provided by law that the Board of Health may enforce regulations for the compulsory bathing of all such persons, old or young, as are so filthy as to facilitate disease. It is very absurd to enforce regulations for cleansing streets, buildings and cess-pools, that persons may be protected, and to have no power to cleanse individuals, who carry the seeds of disease on their own filthy bodies. No arbitrary Government, even, has left a vast city so destitute of public baths as New-York. Even filthy Constantinople has more.

Second. They suggest that there should also be along these water-fronts adequate public water-closets and urinals. Laborers are now often forced to indecent exposures, or to going distances to unwelcome buildings. Nor are these the worst consequences. For a very habitual resort in low grog-shops where the seeds of evils dread is generally resorted, as the compensation of convenience. Such visits may be a poor substitute for home, in comfort. It could be made comfortable, and the lessons of our water-front improvements, in a little [illegible] where the contrast such a contrasting branch to their positive good.

Third—They suggest that at the street end of nearly every pier there should be provided [illegible] for the sale by private houses subject to proper supervision of cheap and wholesome lunches and refreshments for all laborers and transient persons. The sales stands should be allowed to sell lager and other light beers, but no intoxicating drinks. Generally the lunches would be taken in the open air, but there should be provision for a fire in the Winter, and there should be small indoor Winter accommodations. These places would at once be the daily resort of the respectable poor. They would be some check on the temptations of the debasing rum-shops that now disgrace our water-fronts, and have been so strikingly illustrated in some of our pictorial journals. Some of the buildings might have a second story, where there could be newspapers and a seat for a fatigued laborer, or one suddenly taken sick. Most of them could also be used as newspaper stations. Some the whole street from along the piers will be occupied for the great buildings of commerce, save where drunkshops or some worse business may afford a high rent, and more and more the laboring poor, if not new protected, will be tempted and overcharged.

Fourth—They suggest that in the space between the last street buildings, the street ends of the pier, there should be frequent small open spaces, adequately shaded with trees and furnished with strong seats, where the laboring population, in their few hours of leisure, could always find that outdoor protection from the sun and rain, which on undegraded poor man will always prefer to the low indoor haunts or miserable outdoor shade, to which alone he can now resort.

Fifth—There should also be provision for the erection on these spaces of occasional refreshment-rooms, and rooms under like regulations for the sale and reading of public journals in the evening, as well as in the day-time. They should be capable of being warmed in the Winter, and the more persons they could accommodate the better. They could some of them, perhaps, be conveniently of two stories, and might be used as voting places on election days. There should also be erected on these spaces long, open, narrow sheds, where shelter from sun and rain may always be found by the children, the aged and the feeble among the poor. There should be frequent small covered stalls close to the piers, and, under strict regulation, where, at the early hours of every morning, poor men and women could make sales of meats and vegetables without more than a very slight charge for rent. Such means would greatly reduce the prices now paid by the poor. There is hardly a considerable city in the world where the poor are not better protected by public provision of this kind than in New-York.

I confine these suggestions at this time to the water-front, because that alone is being changed by public authority, and there alone is a favorable opportunity for illustrating the spirit of a more benevolent and more intelligent legislation. The same ideas, however, must be put into practice speedily in other parts of the City. We must have frequent small parks and play-grounds for the poor in their own quarters, and not merely great splendid parks, or little fastidious parks for the amusement of the rich. We must have frequent small covered markets, where the poor can buy and sell without high rents; frequent fountains, and well-regulated rooms for refreshments, journals and amusements. We must have public places where poor women can do washing and ironing also. Many would thus be kept from the poor-house. But I cannot now discuss the general subject of amusements and conveniences for the poor. We have much to learn in these particulars.

I fully understand that many people will object to such public action, as beyond the sphere of municipal government, as it is beyond their conceptions of either the causes or the remedies of our municipal degradation. They will not surprise me by any sneers about municipal bathing-tubs and City pea-nut stands. No theory of the dignity of City affairs can be so vast as the shallows of their superficious conceptions, and no ridicule can make such men's comfort appear so contemptible as the selfish conceits of the little, sordid, callous souls that affect to despise such humble reforms. Such men will see no objection to carrying on the whole City administration in the interest of their party, or in the interests of rich, grasping men, who retire daily and early from the water-front offices to Fifth-avenue palaces and Central Park carriages. They see no principle violated in vast dock exactions to be rooted to the rich, but they see a great perversion of public authority in building a respectable bath-house on booth where a temperate stevedore may get a decent lunch, or his poor boy may wash his person. Even such selfish, narrow-minded men may live to repent of their short-sighted folly, if all this water-front improvement is projected, and all the spaces are occupied in the interests of wealth and prosperity, leaving the poor to fester in their garrets and cellars, to roast in the sun, to shiver in the rain, to envy and retaliate at their labor and at the polls. Legislation and accommodation after the kind here suggested would enable any temperate, honest poor man to feel that if the late unnecessary power opened more grog-shops to gain the rabble, and improved a few disembowled places to bamboozle public opinion, the new power has added comfort to every poor man's dwelling, and has enabled him to satisfy his daily wants without becoming the poison of a nuisance or exposing his virtue to temptation. What principle of law or politics is involved in carrying out these suggestions which is not involved in our common school system and our pauper system, I cannot see. The one system rests on the theory that such is the public interest in the condition of the ignorant that property should be taxed for its education, and the other says that such is the public duty in regard to poverty that property should be taxed for its support. The only addition needed for the public action I recommend, is a more sagacious benevolence, a less narrow conception of education, a broader view of public policy and human welfare.

Seventh—We must better comprehend that the education needed to prevent our poor being a political peril and to keep them from the poorhouse, the prison and the rum-shops, is not reading, writing and arithmetic alone; but a regard for cleanliness, a love of reading, all the practicable comforts which foster self-respect, and a conscientious pride and the feeling that public authority, guided by the intelligent and [illegible] wealth, is used in no spirit of selfish economy, but in the spirit of benevolence and wise policy, with equal regard to every condition of property, wealth and natural advantage among the people. Then alone will the multitude, and those favored by nature and by fortune act harmoniously together, and respect and trust each other. The poor and ignorant now too generally distrust the rich and educated, and hence, in part, is the cause of their alliance with party selfishness and personal rascality. It is a curious fact that even the aristocratic and dynastic Governments of the Old World have, in some respects, by their artful and selfish policy, been more successful than we have in causing the poor and ignorant to befriend public rulers and public authority. While we must avoid all deception, and all subservience to gain the ear of the majority, we must bear in mind that a government that seats on popular suffrage cannot afford to leave any portion of the people without a just appreciation not only of the true public interests, but of the fact that such interests can only be secured by the aid of wealth, and under the lead of intelligence. The City legislation has all been based on the theory that wealth was hostile to labor, and that office was the natural gift of party and the fit possession of ignorance. We cannot too soon exhibit the fruits of a better theory.

GOING FOR WOLVES.

Reputed of Three Detroit Sharpers in the Woods of Northern Michigan—Live Horses Used for Bait.

From the Detroit Free Press, Jan. 30.

A young man, named OSCAR M. PERRY, arrived in this city, Saturday, from Gladwin County, having as baggage about seventy-five wolf skins, three or four bear skins and a large number of deer skins, coon skins, muskrat and mink skins. Last Fall he, in company with two other young men, went from Detroit to the county named, with the intention of taking up a permanent residence for the Winter as hunters and trappers. Pretty winterish, they were, too, and made the city among the wild animals a very profitable one. He was yesterday making arrangements to return, and was, for one place, at the brick-yards in Springwells, inquiring after "horses not because, purchasing several old carcasses of his prey. He was under the impression of an old stager, he is to take back a quantity of provisions, and leaves this morning with the intention of remaining in the woods until spring. His purchase of old horses is where the fun comes in. He says he is not out there for hunting wolves. Late Fall two men came to his camp, and claim to be the owners of a large wagon, propose to make it a permanent camp. The house is a two-story one, and the hunters live and sleep in the second story. The lower story is inclosed only on two sides, but the other sides are large doors, so arranged that they can be drawn up or let down at the will of those above. The construction of the cabin in this manner was to make of the first story a wolf trap on a wholesale scale, and it has been tested several times to the satisfaction of the builders. In addition to bear shooting and trapping the men proposed to make wolf-catching a specialty. They found that by using strychnine they lost many of the victims, who ran away and hid where their bodies could not be found, and in this wolves got any of the meat flung around.

After the trap was completed an old horse was purchased at the nearest farm-house for bait. That afternoon bits of meat were flung about, and some bloody pieces of a fresh killed deer were carried off in different directions that the wolves might get the scent. The men remained on the watch all night, but were disappointed. The wolves came within pistol shot, but were afraid to approach nearer, and finally went off. The old horse got no food next day, and at night was complaining about it in a series of weights which could be heard half a mile. More meat was scattered about, and about midnight the wolves came up. After a careful survey to see if a trap existed, one of them ventured in, then another, and at length a dozen wolves surrounded the old horse and began snapping at him. Frightened out of his horse sense, the equine kicked and plunged, and was making it warm for the wolves, when down went the doors and the animals were trapped. Part of the pack were feasting at the horse at the time, having him down, but they left off and began rushing around to get out. One of them found a corner where the door did not fit well, and all rushed to the hole with such force as to take the door off the hinges, scaring up the sleepy men. They found the old horse so badly bitten that he was killed to end his sufferings. The body was left there nights, but the wolves would not touch it, though one or two ventured into the trap without much fear.

Finding that the palates of the animals yearned for old horse living, instead of old horse dead, another jaded animal was purchased, and this time, under like circumstances as before, he was made to decoy several wolves into the trap, and the doors held them. By falling up a tree, one of these the hunters had set out for bait in about the animals. The wolves got suspicious the next night and would not enter the trap, and so on the next night the horse was tied to a tree in the woods, and two wolves were killed by the ambushed hunters. The men had a smaller trap constructed, from which to make away and by taking old horses from one pen to the other, with an occasional feast in the woods, Perry and his companions have done a wolfish business. He stated that one horse stood them about eight wolves generally, but sometimes two came. Twenty-five animals had been incumbent enough to give up the ghost after just eight days' work. Animals were purchased in Bay City and Saginaw, and some have been used up since last Fall.

MAN'S FAITHFUL FRIEND.

Some New Stories About Dogs and Their Ways.

The Worcester (Mass.) Spy hints at an interesting dog story thus: "Bayer, the intelligent black and tan dog of the Police Office, whose history was passed around among the newspapers last year, has taken a bottom into his head that his official duties are no longer at City Hall. He is now one of the jail keepers, and gravely goes the rounds with the female Hall and assumes a chair in the office for his own use. He jumped up from a sound day and scented when to the jail, where, to all appearance, he intends to stay. But there's no telling where this dog's ambition will carry him. In the regular course of promotion, he may even will be elected to the State Prison. Look-out, Chief Rice, the way many a poor dog has gone."

A story about a different kind of a dog is thus given by a paper published in Decatur, Ohio: A curiosity existed in Decatur, in the shape of a dog that could crow, and he did crow. His morning imitation of the crowing of a rooster. His owner, neighbor for this peculiarity, by stating that the dog was born and bred in the country, and from his earliest pup-hood was separated from all other curs, enjoying only the companionship of barn-yard fowls. He soon offered to compete with nature, and finally went off. The old horse got no food next day, and at night was complaining about it in a series of weights which could be heard half a mile. More meat was scattered about, and about midnight the wolves came up. After a careful survey to see if a trap existed, one of them ventured in, then another, and at length a dozen wolves surrounded the old horse and began snapping at him. Frightened out of his horse sense

TAINE'S ENGLISH LITERATURE.

HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By H. A. TAINE. Translated by H. Van Laun, one of the Masters at the Edinburgh Academy. With a Preface prepared expressly for this translation by the Author. 2 vols. 8vo., pp. 535, 518. New-York: HOLT & WILLIAMS.

In the literature of the day no name has risen more rapidly into eminence than that of HIPPOLYTE TAINE. Within ten years he has taken a high place as a critic of art, of literature, of morals and of manners. A man of wide observation, of omnivorous reading, of keen if not profound penetration, of retentive memory, adept at making impressive generalizations, with a style brilliant, picturesque, and impressive—a style that it requires a great deal of steadiness to brush aside, such is its energy, vitality and impetuosity, if not its weight,—a dexterous and subtle if not a sound reasoner, and gifted with that nameless power which enables him to write page after page without one dull sentence, he pleases and interests his readers, and for the moment, at least, bears them away upon the strong, swift current of his wordy utterance. His History of English Literature awakened a lively and admiring attention in England upon its first appearance, in French, a few years ago; and here we have a translation of it by H. VAN LAUN, one of the masters of the Edinburgh Academy. It is in the form of two big, heavy octavo volumes, each of about 550 closely printed pages; and although all its heaviness is due to its bulk, it is a formidable book of which to undertake the reading.

M. TAINE's work is a systematic one; not merely chronological and orderly, but an elaborate development of a theory of literature. The starting point, the course, and the goal of that theory is the notion that a nation's life is like a man's life, having youth, manhood, age and decay;—not a very new notion, and not a very sound one; particularly unsound when applied to the production of a literature; most unsound of all when applied to the literature of the English race. Equally important in M. TAINE's book is the notion, not newer, or, as we believe, sounder, that literature is but the expression of the spirit of the age in which it is produced—a specious, but fanciful theory which a close examination will show to be irreconcilable with fact. M. TAINE, however, is so wedded to it that his work is almost as much a history of the English people and of England as it is of English literature.

French judgment of English literature has hitherto been of no very great value. The difference between French and Anglo-Saxon habits of thought, moral tone and standards of taste, is so great that there could be no real, or at least no spontaneous sympathy between the two peoples in their literary expression, or in any æsthetic manifestation of national character. Hence a mutual repugnance, which, however, has been much greater on the French side than on the English. For although the English nature (in which we must, for our present purpose, include what is called the "American,") is morally constrained and exclusive, it is intellectually open, free and charitable, while on the other hand the French nature is morally unconstrained and receptive, but is intellectually, and particularly in literature and art, disposed to test excellence by fixed standards and established rules. Consequently, although French morals and social life have always been regarded by Englishmen with something like aversion or dread, French authors and artists have received from Englishmen a very high and generous appreciation; but Frenchmen, indifferent or cynical upon the subject of English morals, have regarded the works of English authors with cold distaste. It is only within the last generation that French men-of-letters have regarded English literature as other or better than the rude and irregular production of a people who, with all their mastery of material forces, were in æsthetic development not yet much above the rank of semi-barbarians. This position of the two peoples toward each other is recognized by the author of the present work, and, indeed, is illustrated by him, at times consciously, at others unconsciously, in his own criticisms. But M. TAINE comes to his task as a very different spirit from that which has animated any of his predecessors. Recognizing the difference between the natures and the literary canons of the two peoples, he has yet endeavored to place himself as nearly as possible in sympathy with the national mind which he has endeavored to appreciate and to reveal to his countrymen. This is the admirable purpose of his work. He has sought to understand the Anglo-Saxon mind, the Anglo-Saxon nature; to look at its manifestation from within; to see what English writers have endeavored to say, and why they said it. He has studied his subject as a whole, and, delving to the root of our literature, he has followed its development with careful observation through the varied and vigorous growth of centuries. The result is a really great critical work—a work the judgments of which, although interesting and generally valuable, are full of fresh and suggestive thoughts, even to us who are "to the manner born." These judgments are not to be taken as absolute, complete, and final, but they are always worthy of serious consideration, and they have a peculiar value in that they enable us "to see ourselves as others see us."

M. TAINE begins, as we have said, at the very beginning. Indeed, he not only goes to the root, but strives to get under it. After an introduction in which he sets forth his theory of literary criticism he opens his first book with a description of the country where the English (or Anglo-Saxon) people dwelt before they went to Britain to subdue it, take possession of it, and make it Anglo-land, or England. He tells us what was the soil, the sky, the climate of that land, and how it was affected by its neighborhood to the sea. He finds it a country soaked with water from above, from below, and on all sides, and therefore one to dampen the spirits and clog the intellects of its inhabitants; for such is M. TAINE's theory of the human soul. Men are what they eat, what they breathe, what they see and feel. The Anglo-Saxons were a sad-souled sluggish people. "Rain, wind and surge have room for naught but melancholy thoughts." From such a country such a people went to such another, "a rude and foggy land like their own except in the depth of its sea and the safety of its coasts, which will enable us to call fleets and mighty vessels; green England—the wind rises in the lisp and expresses all. * * * Joyless scene, poverty-stricken soil! What a labor it has been to humanize it!" In such a country he expects to find, and finds, a race brawny, dazed, dismayed, given up to war, the chase, gluttony and drunkenness. "Gliding lowly on wave, sweet gentle dreams are, reason and nimble thought are for the happy [illegible]." [illegible] M. TAINE [illegible] of the Britons, with Julius Cæsar [illegible] of Lancaster [illegible] of social and intellectual culture. To justify his conclusion, he should go over these centuries and contrast the Anglo-Saxon with the inhabitants of the Mediterranean shores before they had felt the influence of Greek civilization. But he believes in the correctness of national traits; for he tells us, with approval, of the assertion of an old historian, that up to the sixteenth century most Englishmen were little else than herdsmen, and that up to the end of the eighteenth drunkenness was the recreation of the higher ranks. "It is still that of the lower, and all the refinement and softening influence of civilization have not abolished among them the use of the cell and the fist." From such a people, he applies the question, what kind of self-manifestation must we expect in literature? This is a hard and partial, although not altogether unfounded, judgment of our forefathers and kindred; but we noticed it not for the purpose of assent or of dissent, but as an complication of M. TAINE's method. That method he pursues throughout his work, in which the various phases of English literature are successively regarded as the produces and exponents of various changes in the political and social condition of the English people. His first book he entitles "The Source," and this part of the subject he treats of in three chapters—"The Saxons," "The Normans," and "The New Tongue." Book Second has "The Renaissance" for its subject, which is considered in six chapters—"The Pagan Renaissance," "The Theatre," "Ben Jonson," "Shakespeare," "The Christian Renaissance," and "Milton." Book Third is upon "The Classic Age," Book Fourth on "Modern Life," and Book Fifth on "Modern Authors." It is not necessary to repeat the subdivisions of these subjects to give the reader a satisfactory notion of M. TAINE's method.

But to our critic's judgment of individual writers. Of these one of the most striking in the early part of the work is the following brief and pungent appreciation of SKELTON. Having set forth the degeneracy of our literature after the time of CHAUCER and GOWER and WICLIF, and shown how it fell into mere imitation, without thought, so that authors copy and copy again, and "mock at each other, grotesquely and gloomily; poor, dull and vulgar figures, shut up in a ship, or made to dance on their tombs to the sound of a fiddle played by a grinning skeleton," (the allusion is to BARCLAY's translation of the Ship of Fools, and LYDGATE's Dance of Death,) he says:

"At the end of all this motley talk, and amid the discord they have conceived for each other, a clown, a tatterer (unknown, descendant of little people) and mountebank versifier, SKELTON, makes his appearance, a virulent pamphleteer, who jumbling together French, English, Latin phrases, with slang and fashionable words, invented words, intermingled with short rhymes, fabricates a sort of literary mock, with which he disquiets Wolsey and the Bishops. Without regard to rhyme, language, set of every kind are at an end; beneath the vain parade of official style there is only a heap of rubbish. Yet, as he says,

> Though my rhyme be ragged,
> Tattered and jagged,
> Rudely rain-beaten,
> Rusty, moth-eaten,
> If ye take wyll there withe,
> It hath in it some pithe.

It is full of political animus, sensual liveliness, English and popular instincts. It lives; it is a coarse life, still elementary, swarming with ignoble vermin, like that which appears in a great decomposed body. It is life, nevertheless, with its two great features, which it is destined to display. The hatred of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, which is the Reformation; the return to the senses and to natural life, which is the Renaissance."

In the Pagan Renaissance he places SURREY, whom he calls an English PETRARCH: "No juster title could be given to SURREY, for it expresses his talent as well as his disposition. In fact, like PETRARCH, the oldest of the humanists and the earliest exact writer of the modern tongue, SURREY introduces a new style, a manly style which marks a great transformation of the mind; for this new form of writing is the result of a superior reflection, which governing the primitive impulse, calculates and selects with an end in view." This strikes us as a correct judgment, a happy comparison, and a good analysis. It is a favorable example, in brief, and with regard to a minor although important author, of M. TAINE's style of criticism. But a few pages further on is one sentence equally characteristic of our author, but not equally sound. Remarking the full expression of sensuous delight which appears in some of the minor poems written in the early part of the Elizabethan era, of which he quotes some very glowing examples, he says, "I can well believe that things had no more beauty then than now; but I am sure that men found them more beautiful." This is one of those contentious sayings that sound very finely and seem very wise, but which are essentially untrue. The critic confounds the expression of beauty with the appreciation of it. The sense of pleasure is not always accompanied with the power or an adequate, or even of a vivid, expression of that pleasure; nor, conversely, is the expression of pleasure always accompanied with a corresponding æsthetic apprehension of it. Writers often express only what is within themselves, and which that which is before them merely rouses into action and urges into utterance. Moreover, WILLIAM MORRIS, who had not published his "Earthly Paradise" when M. TAINE wrote, completely refutes this notion that men found things more beautiful 300 years ago than they do now. No English poet of any age—one excepted—has a fuller, richer, more glowing expression of sensuous delight in external beauty, either of man or of nature, than this latest poet of ruder latter days.

Of SHAKESPEARE M. TAINE's appreciation, then shows a strange and almost startling mixture of keenness of perception and intellectual incompetence, perhaps rather a moral incompetence, a failure completely to understand because of an inability to completely sympathize. His style is thus graphically, and not unfairly, although somewhat unfavorably, described:

"SHAKESPEARE imagines with opulence and excess. He spreads metaphors profusely over all he writes; every instant abstract ideas are changed into images; it is a stream of poetry, a torrent in which the mind is borne along and lost sight of in the midst of the spectacle which there, their course at their side, they unroll within him, covering his arguments; they are his proofs, he prefers them to the pure laws of logic. He does not labor to explain or prove; figures or picture, image or image, he is never copying the universe and pounded thinking thus always condensed and within himself, and are heaped up within him. * * * SHAKESPEARE never does things superfluously, all the powers of his mind are concentrated in the present image or idea. He is buried and absorbed in it with such a genius that he is the spirit of the object he describes, and speaks like it. Words come to his lips, crowding, burning, tumultuous, full of life and energy, and bringing before us, as if we saw them, all the sensations and images of which they are the sign. Hence those marvelous metaphors which make men of him, the most powerful and most true of all painters, the most abundant in creation, the most original in style, the most lyrical in accent, the most sonorous in language, the most full of music, the most penetrating in sensibility, the most comprehensive in sympathy, the most elevated in imagination, the most full of thought, the most condensed in expression

OPINION IN WASHINGTON.

Would the Withdrawal of Great Britain Affect the Competency of the Tribunal of Arbitration?

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—There was only quiet and informal situation in the Cabinet session today on the treaty question. Nothing has been received from London since Tuesday, and it is not true that an official copy of Earl GRANVILLE's note has been received by cable. Gen. SCHENCK's telegram of Tuesday covers the note nearly in full, but as it was an unofficial cipher dispatch, sent for the information of the Government, the receipt of the official copy through Mr. THORNTON must be awaited before an answer is given. It is therefore untrue that any reply has been prepared. A reply is ready in spirit, because the feeling that there can be no concession is so unanimous in the Cabinet that it does not admit of the customary discussion of such subjects. This is one reason why the allusions to the subject in Cabinet have thus far been so brief and informal. The advantage of the position of this Government in the matter is clearly seen and fully appreciated. There is therefore no occasion for anything but a quiet and firm attitude. There is one feature of the case known to some people here which renders the situation remarkable. The contents of Earl GRANVILLE's note are known to be just as foreign to the threatenings of Mr. GLADSTONE's speech and the British Press, as the correspondence of this Government has frequently been to the wild ravings of Fenian leaders in Congress. There is not the slightest intimation that a disruption of the Conference must follow, nor even an intimation that it would enhance the chances of a settlement, or relieve the embarrassment, if the Government would withdraw the claims for consequential damages. The subject of the note is the difference of opinion which has arisen as to whether the submission of the indirect claims is fully covered by the treaty. What may follow if this Government says, as it undoubtedly will, that it regards these claims fully submitted, is purely conjectural. The position assumed in these dispatches of Sunday night that the withdrawal of Great Britain would still leave the Conference a competent tribunal to try the case and render a verdict, is affirmed here by gentlemen of high official position.

Another View of the Case.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—A gentleman of New-York has addressed a private letter to a Senator, stating he has received intelligence from England to the effect that although the Tribunal of Arbitration had not yet established the respective statements of Great Britain and the United States, the British Government has reason to believe the arbitrators will not award a gross sum of damages to the United States; therefore, Great Britain desires the American statement shall be amended so as to omit the alternative of assessment of damages.

DEBATE IN THE SENATE.

Indisposition to Press the Request for Information—The Measure Goes Over Again.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the resolution asking the President to communicate any information in his possession in reference to the alleged intention of Great Britain to repudiate the Treaty of Washington. Mr. EDMUNDS said he thought the information received since the resolution was offered was sufficient to justify the clause which had been struck out at the suggestion of Mr. TRUMBULL, but as his object was merely to get the information from the President he would let the resolution stand as it was, and ask its immediate passage.

Mr. PATTERSON assumed that our Government knew what claims it had a right to present under the treaty, and upon this assumption he was not willing to call upon the President in Parliament language to the United States. He hoped, however, that nothing offensive or violent would be uttered in the Senate, but that our Government and Press would preserve to the end the temperate tone in which they had spoken thus far, and that the country would be satisfied that the proper way would maintain our position in reference to the treaty. He thought the Opposition in Parliament were using that question as a means of ousting the Gladstone Ministry, between they assumed that the United States Government had a right to present the claim as they had done, but from the British statements at Washington were overreached, and it was evident that Mr. GLADSTONE was trying to evade the attack by falling in with the Opposition to ascertain the extent, and denouncing the American claim as preposterous and absurd.

Mr. BAYARD said he would not discuss the question, lest he should be led into an indiscretion, as Mr. PATTERSON had just been. It would be better, he thought, not to undertake to discuss the motives of the English Prime Minister, at least until we had a better basis for the discussion than a mere cable report. Recognized the Treaty of Washington as a high and solemn contract between two nations, and did not believe that, after full consideration, either nation would be likely to violate it. As to the pending resolution, he thought it had better be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If that Committee desired any information in the President's possession, it could easily obtain it, and whenever the President received any thing important on the subject, he would probably communicate it without a direct request of the Senate. He therefore moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PATTERSON denied that he had disguised the English Premier's motives. He had only quoted his language, and that, he insisted, was insulting to this country.

Mr. MORTON suggested that Mr. EDMUNDS immediately send the resolution with the information received across the Atlantic made by the British Government against the cases submitted by the Government of the United States. The resolution as it stood assumed that there was an intention to revoke the treaty, whereas neither the Queen nor the Premier's speech indicated any such intention, but merely spoke of serious objections against the case presented by the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS said his resolution did not assume that the British Government intended to revoke the treaty. It merely assumed that there was a doubt and certainty of it being so, very plainly. The Senator (MORTON) was mistaken as to the Premier's speech. Mr. GLADSTONE was reported to have said that the American claims were preposterous and absurd, and such as no people in the last extremity of war or in the lowest depth of national degradation would accede to. England is to their hearts, was the sense of his speech as reported. If this report was correct, and if the English language meant in England what it means here, the Premier certainly did intimate that England would revoke the treaty, unless the United States would accede to the claims in question. However, as he chose to adopt the construction asked for, he would not pursue the question, and, finally, if the report was correct, he expected in returning it to the Queen. It was an ordinary measure of courtesy, and it had not been the fault of this Government if the Queen had not been furnished with the same information which the President had received. He had not discussed the question in any way which could be construed into a disposition to embarrass the Government. He had not the slightest disposition to do so. He was willing to wait for the Senate Committee to report, and meanwhile he would not be drawn into a discussion of the question

THE CANAL RING.

The Canal Appraisers' Act—Reflections on Attorney-Rules of the "Ring."

Several days since we took occasion to lay before our readers and the public at large some facts in respect to the act, passed in 1870, conferring additional and extraordinary powers upon the Board of Canal Appraisers; amid the multiplied instances of the law-making authority perverted in the interests of the national Ring organized for the plunder of the State, this was a matter that had escaped observation. Indeed, the circumstances had only come to our knowledge quite recently, and we knew that the public was as ignorant on the subject as we had ourselves been, up to the time our information was received. We therefore made no delay in preferring our exposition, and in calling upon the Legislature to apply the proper remedy.

We have noticed that Mr. FORT, the Chairman of the Canal Committee in the Assembly, some two weeks since, introduced a bill in that body to repeal the acts of 1870 and 1871. The bill was referred to Street Committee, lost it slumbers. In our opinion the case was one which demanded, and would justify the speediest action on the part of the Legislature. We have no distrust of Mr. FORT. We have no reason to doubt that he is an earnest Reformer, and that he will distinguish himself as such in the course of the present session. But we feel impatient about this measure of repeal, and should rejoice to see the Legislature roused up to a due sense of its responsibility in the premises. To expunge the laws in question, so liable to be applied to bad purposes, from the statute books, would be a work of merit in itself, and would furnish satisfactory evidence that this Legislature might be relied on to inaugurate the era of retrenchment and reform.

The charges that we have made touching the extent to which the Canal Appraisers are involving the State derive corroboration from later intelligence from Albany. We are astounded to learn that deficiencies have been ascertained, for which provision is to be made, in addition to the ordinary civil list, of over six millions of dollars! We are not surprised to find that the sum needed to pay up the awards for claims adjusted by the Canal Appraisers and the Canal Board amounts to seven hundred thousand dollars—$400,000 for the former and $300,000 for the latter. It does not yet appear what portion of the latter consists of awards that have been appealed from the Appraisers to the Canal Board. Perhaps they do not change character by the transfer.

Can our readers—can the lawyers engaged in the lucrative practice of prosecuting obsolete and abandoned canal claims before the Appraisers, on shares, inform us how it happens that, at this late period, this enormous mass of claims should lie against the State at all? Is there to be no period of time, no millennial day, when the State shall have settled up, paid up, and cleared off that entire class of liabilities, which the Board of Appraisers was created to adjust? Why, it would appear not. On the contrary, instead of coming to an end, and showing a balanced account in this department of the State administration, these claims, notwithstanding the most vigorous efforts to sweep them away and extinguish them forever, swell annually into more colossal dimensions. Each recurring fiscal year reveals another Pelion behind an Ossa, rearing its crest heavenward, and frowning upon the minds below, who are only regarded as fit subjects for taxation and extortion.

But it is not entirely with this matter of a deficiency of four hundred thousand dollars that we have to deal at present. Former Legislatures have been endeavoring to keep pace with these frightful outgoes by liberal appropriations to meet them as they accrued. Chapter 709 of the laws of 1870 appropriates an unexpended balance of some previous appropriation for other purposes, for the payment of awards made by the Canal Appraisers. We stop to marvel that there should have been an unexpended balance in the Treasury of any description, but it is plain to see why it was passed over to the Canal Appraisers. It went where it was most wanted, and where it was sure not to remain an "unexpended balance" long. Chapter 768, same year, provides for the levy of a State tax of seven-eighths of a mill upon the real and personal valuation of the State, to create a fund out of which these awards are to be paid. What sum is thus produced, we have as yet no means of knowing. It was doubtless intended to be productive enough to meet all demands against it, legitimate and illegitimate, under the general and sweeping act of 1870. For the payment of Canal Appraisers' awards in 1868, the sum of $379,380 04 was appropriated; and for 1869, a like appropriation of over $381,000 was made to meet the awards of the Canal Appraisers and the Canal Board. And now it turns out that there is a deficiency to be provided for, for these purposes, of seven hundred thousand dollars more!

These figures are overwhelming. They more than justify the worst apprehensions that we expressed when on this topic the other day. They call loudly for the most stringent measures of reform that the Legislature can devise, and they cry for prompt action.

Six millions of deficiencies at the State capital tells a sad story of the operations and depredations of the Canal "Ring," and of the laxity of legislation by the partners and auxiliaries of that newly-engendered power in the State holding seats in the Senate and Assembly. For seven or eight years, at least, this stupendous system of pillage and spoliation has been progressing in our midst. Tammany Hall and the Canal "Ring," in an unholy alliance, have sucked the public treasuries of the City and State more effectually than an invading army could have done. In the commercial Metropolis the populace can point out the individuals, as they roll along in their costly carriages through the streets, who have become millionaires by robbing the City coffers—by forgeries and frauds and crimes of every degree. In the interior, along the line of the canal, the duplicated millionaires, made such by claim allowances and stolen bonds under canal contracts favorably or corruptly construed, are as easily and familiarly designated. Under the malign influence these infecting the whole atmosphere and undermining the public morals, corruption has found its way into a hundred minor and subordinate channels. The holders of public trusts on all sides turn up derelict. Statesmanship is baffled by the number, the ramifications, the turpitude of the delinquencies disclosed. Intelligent and reflecting men begin to whisper to each other in earnest inquiries: "Is the republican system a failure?" "Is the theory of popular intelligence and virtuousness a delusion?"

In answer, we are prepared to exclaim with the heroic Lawrenson: "Don't give up the ship!" Let us organize reform with the stern resolution not to surrender, not to be demoralized, and not to be cheated. We believe there is a way out of the labyrinth in which we find ourselves involved, and we mean to find it. All men are not corrupted

THE WATER-METER JOB.

Mr. Navarro's Claim for Compensation—A Question that is the Most and Should the Money of Honest Taxpayers Be Wasted to Pay the Claim.

The claim of Mr. JOSE F. NAVARRO for compensation alleged to have flown from the City for a water meter purchased for the purpose of which he is the President, but of which the "Boss" is said to be the ruling spirit, has again directed attention to the Water-Job, and some curious facts have been brought to light in connection. At the meeting of the Board of Aldermen, last Monday, the following will be laid before that body:

> NO. 41 WALL STREET, NEW-YORK CITY, Feb. 8, 1871.
>
> To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen of the City of New-York, gentlemen:
>
> I, JAMES COCHRANE, citizen and taxpayer, do hereby offer my complaint against the action of Jose F. Navarro and against the payment of the claim of said Navarro, and I hereby forbid the payment of that claim on the grounds that, of frauds in the trials and procurement of the contract for the said Water-Meter, the contract is void, which the twenty are constructed; that, of the meter, it is not twenty times; that a meter was not to be furnished for; fourth, that the only trials had were the same. JAMES COCHRANE.

The reason of this notice on the part of Mr. COCHRANE is that the selection of this meter by the Commissioner of Public Works was unwarranted, and that the claim set up is not therefore a just one. The whole story in the case is here given, although a portion of it has before been alluded to in the TIMES.

In 1869 the Legislature passed an act giving TWEED, as Commissioner of Public Works, the power of selecting water-meters to be placed on all buildings where Croton water was used except dwelling houses. Accordingly, TWEED advertised for all inventors of meters to send them to the pipe-yard at the foot of East Twenty-fourth-street, where an allcoved test of the different meters submitted took place, lasting from day to day from the 3d of October to the 2d of November. For the purpose of the test TWEED caused to be erected two tanks holding about 10,000 gallons each, with costly pipes and other fixtures. The uncertainty was that it was wrong to be strictly impartial for the sole purpose of ascertaining the best meter; yet, it is alleged, no fair trials were held, and that the result was not made public as promised.

Mr. COCHRANE asserts that the meter patented by him was manipulated, and it was so knowingly done as to at once prove the fact. It was placed, on Saturday night, in a room supposed to be locked and kept closed during the progress of the tests, and on Monday, when it was examined, the register marked 5,000 gallons of water as having passed through, it more than the actual quantity of water to be measured, thus conclusively showing that the machine had been tampered with. COCHRANE, it seems, protested against such an absurdity being placed upon record, and showed the impossibility of the performance of such a feat. J. JOHNSON, the engineer in charge, reluctantly allowed a second trial, and this time it is claimed the meter registered with exactness, furnishing further proof that it had been manipulated, and that the tests were not made in good faith. JOHNSON then, it is said, wished to have the record of both tests set aside, and give the meter another trial, but the failure rankling, but the owner of it is insisted upon the preservation of the record. The entire list, it is alleged, was a very superficial one, and in no way calculated to determine anything satisfactory of the merits of the respective meters. Two essential qualities of a good meter are accuracy of measurement and durability, and a comparative trial of one day, to which many of the meters presented were subjected, is not sufficient to decide either of these points.

The trials were represented to be public, and yet, during a portion of the time they were in progress, a gentleman taking notes of the experiments not to make them public. At the close of the tests no official record of them was given to the public, and none of the meters tried were adopted; but shortly after a meter called the Moore meter was submitted to a private committee, and pronounced by JOHNSON to be the best, under circumstances which lead to the supposition that the knowledge gained in the legitimate testing was useful to the maker of this meter.

From the complicated and delicate mechanism of these meters, they are not likely to endure practically one, the meter which cost $70 lasting nearly four times the cost of other meters. The Ring meter, besides, is made wholly of brass, which is dangerous to health on account of the poisonous solutions thereby introduced into the water. It is charged that none of the meters were tested to measure water as slowly as one gallon per hour, the first essential of a practical meter, and it is said by experts that none yet invented can measure at this ratio after the wear of a single year.

The contract for supplying the meter, against paying for which Mr. COCHRANE protests, was made between TWEED and Mr. NAVARRO, as owner of the patent. Ten thousand were to be furnished on the contract, the latter paying the costs, and a lien on the property securing payment. Until recently, it is understood, they were manufactured by the Hydraulic Machine Company at the rate of about one hundred a day. Only 4,000 have thus far been delivered. The contract with Mr. NAVARRO is in the Department of Public Works. It is dated Aug. 22, 1871, and requires 10,000 water-meters to be furnished on or before July 1, 1872. The contract was "signed in presence of ALEX. FRESER," and approved by EDWARD H. TRACY, Chief Engineer. The face of this Ring job will be watched with interest.

THE CRESSKILL MURDER.

The Inquest Yesterday—The Watch Proved by Avery Identified as the Stolen Watch—The Verdict and Conviction of the Prisoner.

The inquest upon the body of JACOB ERB, who was killed at Cresskill, N. J., on Tuesday morning, was held yesterday at the depot of the Northern Railroad of New-Jersey at Cresskill. Coroner WESTERVELT conducted the investigation. The excitement growing out of the reports of the murder was very large, and people in the vicinity and the proceedings before the Coroner were watched with deep interest.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. ERB.

The first witness called was MATILDA ERB, the wife of the deceased. Her testimony related principally to the watch owned by the deceased, which had been pawned by the prisoner, AVERY, in New-York, and upon the identification of which depended in a great degree the proof of guilt against Avery. She said: My husband exchanged watches some time ago with another man, who he got in Newburgh and in New-York. I have seen the watch he gave me; I have seen the watch owned by my husband; about one year ago he had it repaired in New-York; I recognize the chain also; I saw my husband take the watch and chain when he went to the barn on Tuesday morning. The witness described minutely the several attachments of the chain.

TESTIMONY OF CONSTABLE VERBERCKE.

JOHN R. VERBERCKE, constable of Englewood, testified that he and Officer DUNN arrested AVERY and AYRAU in New-York; the former went ahead with Officer DUNN; he dropped a two-cent stamp which he picked up; he then dropped a small piece of paper; I picked that up and showed it to Mr. HILL; he said it was a pawn-ticket; I saw AVERY drop it; we took him to the Station-house; while we were on the way he was all the time feeling in his pocket; I have the pawn-ticket to Mr. HILL at the Station-house.

TESTIMONY OF DETECTIVE HILL.

WILLIAM H. HILL, a detective of Englewood, who was the principal officer concerned in tracing AVERY and securing his arrest, testified: I took the pawn-ticket dropped by AVERY and took it to the pawnbroker whose name was on it; he said there was $2 25 due upon it; he said he could identify the man who left it there on the day preceding; the pawnbroker's name is MORRIS LEVY; I told Officer DUNN to take him up to the Station-house so as he could identify AVERY; I then went to Mr. CHASE's store, and upon returning to the Station-house I discovered that LEVY had positively identified the prisoner as the man who left his watch at his place; Mr. CHASE identified the watch as the one worn by the deceased.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES W. CLARK.

JAMES W. CLARK, nephew of ERB's employer, deposed: I heard ERB leaning on his arm at the stable-window; I said, "JACOB, who has done this?" he said, "Let me see; let me see;" I saw drops of blood on the floor of the stable and on the front side of the stable in the passage-way; I saw the club and the bar of iron; the club was standing in the passage-way; the bar was lying on the floor; I did not at the time see marks of blood on the iron; I think ERB was not hurt in the stable; I did not see ERB make any motion when I asked him if he was hurt by the horses; I told him, "MATILDA is looking out; he seemed to know what I said, but he made no reply; I do not know that any bad feeling existed between ERB and AVERY; I never knew the horses to kick.

TESTIMONY OF DR. PIERSON AND OTHERS.

The testimony of Dr. PIERSON, who attended the wounded man, was read to the jury. The doctor's statement, which was made before the Coroner, was to the effect that, in removing the scalp I found a quantity of blood under it; I also found a fracture of the skull three inches in length; the wound was evidently caused by a blunt instrument; I do not think that it could have resulted from a slight blow; the wound might have been inflicted by an iron bar similar to the one that was shown to me; I have examined the bar and have found what I believe to be blood upon it.

Dr. JOHN J. MARTIN testified: I found pools of blood on the floor of the stable; I examined bar; it was from two to three feet long; it took the two hands to lift it; I should think the blow was struck with the bar; I should think the blow was struck while the man was stooping; the blow was struck from behind; I should think the man was struck while in the act of stooping; the blow was struck with great force; I should think the man was struck while in the act of stooping; the blow was struck with great force; I should think the man was struck while in the act of stooping; the blow was struck with great force

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 104.—The United States vs. John Henderson.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.—This was an information to recover forfeitures on 169 barrels of distilled spirits, which it was admitted, were removed from the distillery without payment of the internal revenue tax, and with intent to defraud the Government. But Henderson claimed to have purchased the spirits without knowledge of any intended fraud, while they were stored in a United States Bonded Warehouse, where they had been removed by the distiller, and to have paid the tax thereon to the Collector. This plea was admitted by the Government, it being conceded that the claimant was an innocent purchaser; and on these agreed facts the District Court found for the defendant, and the judgment was affirmed in the Circuit, where it was said: It is difficult to see how the removal could have been made to defraud the United States of the tax being made to a Government warehouse, and a mere intent to defraud, formed on existing in the mind of the distiller, which intention has never been executed, or attempted to be, but is given as a conclusion. The only execution, or attempt to execute the unlawful intent, is the removal of the spirits by the distiller to the warehouse of the United States, which removal was as legal and not one illegal act. It is here contended by the Government that this conclusion was error, and that the fallacy lies in assuming it to be impossible that one step in an attempt to defraud the Government of the tax due, could be the removal of the spirits to a bonded warehouse. In order to make this reasoning consistent, it is said, the court must judicially know, there is such an impossibility, and that it could not know. The truth is, and it is notorious, that spirits have often been removed to Government bonded warehouses from distilleries, in accordance with conspiracies between distillers and warehousemen, in order to defraud the Government by having the spirits secretly drawn off from the barrels, and under warehouse entries, then sold, without paying them released upon worthless security without payment of the tax. The agreed facts admit the fraudulent intent of the distiller, and the Court erred in setting aside the admission.

Solicitor-General Bruton and Assistant Attorney-General Hill for the Government; L. A. Sheldon and J. A. Garfield for plaintiff.

No. 103.—Kitchen vs. Bedford and Webber.—Error to the Circuit Court for Missouri.—This action was to recover the value of certain railroad bonds which Kitchen had placed in the hands of one Reyburn, to sell for his account and invest the proceeds in land. Subsequently Reyburn sold the bonds to Bedford, and still later Bedford sold them to Webber. The plaintiff put in evidence of a contract on the part of Reyburn to dispose of the bonds and invest the proceeds of the sale, and rested his case. The Court thereupon, at the request of defendants, nonsuited, and ruled that upon the evidence there be no recovery because it was not shown that the bonds had been sold by Reyburn and the proceeds applied as agreed, and no fraud was in respect of the sale. It is here contended that the failure to perform the contract plainly appeared from the evidence, and that Bedford and Webber, both having knowledge of the agreement between Kitchen and Reyburn, took the bonds with notice, and are liable.

Carlisle & McPherson, for plaintiffs in error; T. T. Grant for defendant.

THE BUFFALO VICTORY.

Completeness of the Republican Success in the Special Election on Tuesday.

From the Buffalo Express, Feb. 8.

The victory of the Republicans in the election on Tuesday was complete; we did not sustain a single reverse in any part of the field that we had reasonable ground for claiming as our own. The majorities on our city ticket were unparalleled in the history of municipal elections in this city. They were as follows:

	Majority.
Alexander Brush, Mayor	2,[illegible]
Lewis M. Evans, Comptroller	2,[illegible]
Frank R. Perkins, City Attorney	2,[illegible]
Joseph Scott, Treasurer	2,[illegible]
John A. Ditto, City Engineer	2,[illegible]
James Franklin, Street Commissioner	2,[illegible]
Josephus N. Larned, Superintendent Education	2,[illegible]
Patrick O'Donovan, Assessor	2,[illegible]
Francis C. Krall, Overseer of Poor	2,[illegible]
Daniel P. Smith, Police Justice	2,[illegible]
Cornelius A. Waldron, Justice of Peace	1,[illegible]

It will be seen that the smallest majority was 1,[illegible], and the largest 2,[illegible]. The average majority of the eleven candidates was 2,[illegible]. Figures are satisfactory. By that immense majority have the people decided to commit the Administration of their City Government into the hands of Republicans. With the exception of the Assessor's office, in which two Democrats had over, every department will be controlled by Republicans; and in that office the people showed their desire to effect a change by giving Mr. DEMPSTER, the Republican candidate for Assessor, the splendid majority of 2,[illegible]. The City officers elect will qualify next Monday, and take immediate possession of their respective offices. In all human probability, therefore, within a week the anomalous condition into which the Democratic administrators succeeded in throwing our municipal affairs will be at an end, and the city will be running again with a legal government under Republican auspices.

When we come to speak of the Council it is hard to avoid enthusiasm. That the Republicans would elect thirteen out of the fifteen candidates for Aldermen no sane man expected; no one should have predicted the election of an Republican Alderman in the First Ward, that Gibraltar of the Democracy, would have been called a hopeless task; we laughed at as a downright fool! Yet these strange things are now sober realities. This, in effect, gives the Council to the Republicans for two years. Our friends will have a majority of eleven in the new Council, and eleven Aldermen to hold over for the Council of 1873. We shall, therefore, only have to elect three Aldermen next Fall to make a sure thing of that. This election also gave us twenty out of the twenty-five Supervisors, securing a Republican Board by a majority of eighteen, which may be put down, or increased at the town elections in March next.

These are splendid material fruits of victory, certainly; but they are as nothing to the Republican Party compared with the moral gain it has realized in the harmony, good feeling, spirit and prestige with which this victory will enable us to enter upon the grand national campaign next June. This, after all, is the sum of our triumph.

The Controller of the Currency.

From the Chicago Journal, Feb. 7.

H. R. HULBURD, Esq., who has been Comptroller of the Currency at Washington during the past four years, and who was yesterday renominated to the Senate by the President, and promptly confirmed, is a Chicago man. He was formerly a commission merchant here, and the publisher of a commercial circular. Some six or eight years ago he went to Washington, became assistant in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and subsequently was appointed to a second position in that office. Mr. HULBURD is a young man, but possessed of unusual nerve and financial sagacity. To him was owed the national banks indebted for their prompt and complete restoration after the fire. He came personally to the city, conferred with the officers of the various banks, informed himself as to their condition, and insisted that all of them should be installed in full vigor in a week. All of them did so—some within a week—and the banks themselves, as well as the business community in general, were soon made to realize the wisdom of his policy.

Strange for Accident to Happen to Such.

From the Worcester (Mass.) Spy, Feb. 8.

Mrs. HARRINGTON, of this city, mother of Mr. EDWARD F. HARRINGTON, was strongly impressed yesterday while sitting in Washington square, A horse came up behind her unobserved and the shaft, striking her on the arm, lifted her out of the sleigh and carried her several rods, cutting her head and tearing her clothing quite off of her. She finally broke the shaft from the traces and ran off, and stopped under the tree before it could be stopped. No bones were broken, but the horse to her had seemed most imminent danger.

FRIDAY, Feb. 9—P. M.

Appearances in Wall-street and on the Stock Exchange early this forenoon and the first Cable telegrams from London indicated a better confidence than at the close of business yesterday in regard to the Treaty difficulty. There was a material recovery in the demand for Stocks on our Exchange and a decided improvement in the Cable advices as to the British and American funds in London. But these promises were of short duration, however justified at they seemed to be at the opening of the market. Gold, after falling to 110¼@110⅛ ⅌ cent., returned to 110⅞ ⅌ cent., and a strong demand opening up for Exchange at extreme figures, especially for short sight, or demand Bills on London, which were done as high as 109⅞ ⅌ cent. The Sixty days rate was 109¾@109⅞ ⅌ cent. The London quotations for United States 6-20s and the New Loan were not so good in the Afternoon by ⅛@¼ ⅌ cent., as the improved figures of the morning; though against this circumstance we may refer to a very active demand in our own market for nearly all the Public Funds, induced by yesterday's decline. The amounts taken up for home employment are larger than the return of Bonds, thus far indicated from the other side, although one or two houses were heavy sellers yesterday, and sellers again today, for delivery on Foreign account, or for a joint operation between London and New-York.

The market for Money has assumed a very steady tone at 6@7 ⅌ cent. on call loan to the Brokers and 7 ⅌ cent. for discounts at Bank. We hear nothing new of the course of Currency this week to or from the interior. The difference, if anything, is in favor of the City. The Senate, at the instance of Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of Finance, has passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw the remaining $26,000,000 of Treasury 3 ⅌ cent. Greenback Certificates, at the rate of $2,000,000 per month, in place of awaiting the creation of new National Banks in the same proportion. Heretofore, under the Act of July, 1870, the two operations have gone together at about the rate of $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 per month.

An advance in recovery in the Railroads and some of the Miscellaneous Stocks like Western Telegraph and Pacific Mail, early in the day was partially lost in the Afternoon, and the temper of speculation is by no means confident, even while supported by one or more wealthy Bull operators. Some of the Southern State Bonds are exceptionably firm, with a considerable business in South Carolines, Virginias, and Tennessees, but on what calculation, except in the case of South Carolina, is not understood. Some of the New-York Bondholders of South Carolina, of recent date, have presented an offer to accept 75 ⅌ cent. in a Consolidated Loan, bearing 6 ⅌ cent. Interest, with a pledge of a four-mille tax on the $130,000,000 real and personal taxables of the State, which would give the Interest on $66,000,000 of the new bonds, and leave $10,000 a year for the Ante-War debt and such contingencies as might occur in the general readjustment of the State finances. The January and July 6 ⅌ cents, advanced today to 22¾@23 ⅌ cent., which includes the overdue January 1872 coupon. The proposed offer would, if carried out, retire about $13,950,000 old Bonds, or Bonds, such as are now selling in this market, issued since the War.

After the late Board the following quotations were made as compared with Thursday night:

The New-York Times.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential campaign. This department of the paper will be uniformly full and trustworthy. Renewed exertion will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly edition, and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

Before Mr. HORACE GREELEY pursues any further his craze about succeeding President GRANT, will he explain how he became a partner with W. M. TWEED and SANDS in the "Tobacco Manufacturing Company?" Mr. GREELEY cannot deny that he did enter into this business association with TWEED—although, perhaps, he will say that he never "made any money out of it." It is curious that he never does derive profit from any of his enterprises—not even from that great scheme of supplying the Tweed & Greeley Tobacco Manufactory Company with Champagne cabbages as the raw material of the "finest Havana cigars" with a picture of GREELEY on each box.

There is some prospect that the officials of the Market Savings Bank will be afforded practical experience of the penalties the law affixes to the betrayal of such important trusts as were lodged in their hands. Witnesses are not wanting to what seems to be criminal favoritism to depositors, in letting them know of the insolvent condition of the Bank, while to new applicants the Bank was represented as sound. This looks like obtaining money on false pretenses. Meanwhile, what is doing about the offenses of HANK SMITH, President of the Bowling-green Bank? Was there nothing criminal in his false representations, continued active exposure, in the loans to fictitious persons, in the doctoring of the statements, in the altering of the accounts? Are offices of delicate responsibility and of honor, like the Police Commissionership, the homage of sponging toadies at the Delevan House, and the shivering tenderness of the Tribune, all that such a career as this of SMITH'S brings to a man?

While the Fenton papers go on cackling about "reforms in the Custom-house"—the reform they mean being the instant appointment of a "Fenton man" as Collector—the President is preparing some real reforms, which will close the Custom-house forever to corrupt office-seekers, like the Fenton gang. Gen. GRANT is very apt to surprise his assailants by a flank movement, and it will not be satisfactory to the Greeleyites to learn that there is no chance of their obtaining the offices in the Custom-house for division among men of the type of HANK SMITH and BEN MANSFIELD. When an abuse connected with the Federal Administration is exposed, it is incorrected—from which system the Democrats might very usefully take a hint. The reforms now proposed in the Custom-house will be heard of very shortly.

When we consider the circumstances of the case, there is something noteworthy in the attitude of the United States Senate in the Alabama business, as contrasted with that of the House of Commons. Ascribe to the injured party in the affair; the losses for which the British Premier contemptuously declares our claims are absolutely inadmissible, were for years, in the most humiliating way, plundered by the, in war, formidable, in large part, given out of the sale of England. Yet while the English House of Commons chases, first Disraeli and then GLADSTONE, for hot-tempered declamations against the mere entertainment of these claims, the American Senate, on the suggestion of the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, that "silence is wisdom," declines even to pass a resolution of inquiry on the subject.

The Democratic and Minority Representation.

We regret to see the Albany Argus opposing the new charter for this City, on the ground of its minority representation, and echoing the vague complaints of less intelligent papers about the "complicated" character of the cumulative system of voting. According to the Argus, New-York, in the next charter election, must prepare itself for a "conundrum," not a canvass, while those who do understand the problem will be enabled, by their superior mathematical ability, to have every petty corrupt ring and clique represented in the City Government.

It seems to be one of the Providential judgments on the Democratic Party that, having survived all their moral impulses and grand ideas, they do not even know intellectually what is for their interest. The ordinary observer would suppose that when a new feature is introduced into State politics, designed to protect minorities, the party which for the last ten years has been a minority party would jump at the opportunity, and support the reform vigorously. If any body need minority representation throughout the Union, it is the Democrats. What a difference in their favor would be made by it in such States as Massachusetts and the North-west! But when the principle is proposed in our City Government, we find the whole party rallying against it merely because of a party advantage in the City which they would lose by it.

In the form in which the Seventy propose it, there is not the slightest ground for the objections of the Albany Democratic journal. It is so plain that even the wayfaring and repeating Democrats of our lowest wards can understand it. In the district, for instance, comprising the First, Fourth and Sixth Wards, the minority is in the proportion of twenty to one hundred, and this minority, for the first time in the memory of man, will be enabled to be represented. Each independent citizen in that orderly district will approach the polls on the morning of election with the privilege of depositing nine votes for Alderman. He may give them all to his favorite pugilist, Billy O'Mulligan, or he may divide them as he chooses among various Democratic candidates up to the number of five. This surely is not difficult even for a Sixth Ward "rough" to understand.

If he happens to be manipulated and guided by some patriotic leader like Mr. WILLIAM M. TWEED, or Mr. FIELDS, he will not pour out all his votes on his favorite O'Mulligan, but will choose, say, three others. He will not dare to divide among the whole five his nine votes, because his shrewd leaders will tell him that the cunning Republicans will concentrate on one or two, and thus beat him. Yet it will undoubtedly happen that, having this liberty of voting for his favorites, he will put an unequal vote on particular candidates, and thus give the minority additional chances. A large majority could seldom be so perfectly managed as to divide their votes equally among the largest possible number of candidates. The chances would be that only three out of the five candidates for Alderman would get the large majority of the Democratic vote.

The small and intelligent minority of these wards, who, for a generation, had voted like a forlorn hope, and never once achieved the slightest success, or been once represented in City or State, would now have their chance. Being small, and being intelligent, they could more easily combine. They would undoubtedly determine to divide their votes equally or nearly so between two candidates. In the numerical proportions we have supposed, of one hundred to twenty, the majority could, if they were sufficiently organized, carry in certainly four candidates, but the chances would be immensely in favor of the minority securing two out of the five, so that they would enjoy even more than their share of representation—that is, one-sixth of the voters would have two-fifths of the government.

This, though an evil, would be counterbalanced in the wards like the Ninth and Fourteenth, where the voters were more evenly balanced, and chances might easily give the majority more than their proportion of representation. The objections which such Democratic organs as the Argus copy and repeat to this system, are not so much to the cumulative vote, which is simple enough for a child to understand, as to such complicated systems as the "Geneva vote" and "Hare's system." These last, though they come much nearer the ideal end of suffrage, are too complicated and strange to our habits ever to be adopted by the people generally. The real objection to the cumulative vote is the same that lies against the whole suffrage by majorities—that is, that caucuses and cliques can rule it. But this would certainly be less of an evil under the proposed plan than under the old, and would be counterbalanced by the representation of a minority. Under the cumulative plan, the majority would be more individual in their preferences, and less liable to be led by demagogues and caucuses than now.

The true objection to the charter the Argus has not touched upon—the extreme localism, and the uncertain tenure of the most responsible and important Departments, the Commissioners. These certainly ought not to be made so entirely dependent on the vote of the Board of Aldermen. Not should our important Commissioners be placed under the supervision, and liable to be removed at the approval of the future Irish-Catholic City authorities. The health of the City is too important to be left, as it is, in the management of the Police and the Board of Health.

Making Our Situation Worse.

We need not say to any of our readers who have had opportunities either for experience or observation of the operation of our system of local taxation, that it has long been very bad. The system has nearly every conceivable defect. It is deceitful, for under the guise of the simple and equal taxation of all property, property has been taxed in as great a variety of ways and degrees as the caprice, ignorance, prejudice or corruption of estimators could produce. It is ineffective, for it has left vast portions of the property of citizens untaxed. It is unjust, for it has duplicated burdens, and in many cases has put a premium on evasion. It is confused, and allows different sections of the State to be taxed for widely different proportions of their actual possessions. It is unpardonable to the State as a whole, because it contrasts very unfavorably with the systems of the States of Pennsylvania, New-Jersey and Connecticut, lying close to the City of New-York, against bidding against advantages conferred by our own laws for the investment of capital.

If it be asked how such a system has grown up in a free State, whose affairs are managed theoretically in the interest of its citizens, and by their immediate representatives, the reply is that until within a half score of years, the relative burdens of taxation have not been heavy enough to attract attention. Wealth had up to that period increased so rapidly and so easily, and the expenditures to be met by taxation had been so slight in proportion to the means at hand to meet them, that the people could not afford the time or the labor of investigating the operation of tax laws, or effecting a change in them. But since the outbreak of the rebellion, and the appearance among our local burdens of taxation of provision for bounties and for war purpose generally, the importance of taxation, both relative and actual, has largely increased. It we did not perceive this fact during the war, while values were artificially advanced, and wealth was apparently increasing, we began to perceive it as soon as values began to shrink, and we found it a constantly more difficult task to make our incomes suffice for our expenditures.

It was a fortunate thing for the people of the State that, at a moment when the real importance of the matter was being forced upon them in a practical and painful manner, there was called to the study of the problem of Reform one of the ablest and most experienced thinkers on this and kindred subjects that this country has produced—a gentleman whose services to the nation cannot easily be overrated, and whose energy, acuteness, and practical sense have given him a high standing in every country where intelligent financial legislation is valued. The Tax Commission, of which Mr. D. A. WELLS is Chairman, last year made its first report, exposing in a clear manner the evils and incongruities of our tax-laws, and suggesting practical remedies. With characteristic moderation, the Commissioners did not urge immediate action, but asked that their suggestions be made public, and that, at the close of another year, they should be allowed to present further results of their investigations, and to embody their recommendations in the form of law. This they were allowed to do, and we yesterday presented to our readers the substance of their report.

The law proposed by the Commission contemplates a radical change in the methods of assessment of property, and provides for extending those methods uniformly throughout the State, not only for the assessment of property for purposes of State taxation, but for its assessment for purposes of all taxation. Under the present system, the law requires the taxation of all real and personal property at its actual value, less the debts owed by the owner. In point of fact, however, the real estate of the State is taxed on assessed valuations of from twenty per cent. to fifty per cent. of its actual value, and the personal property on an assessed valuation of not more than one-eighth. So gross is the violation and evasion of the law in respect to personal property, that it would be easy to point out thirty men whose actual personal property exceeds the assessed valuation of all the personal property of the State. To remedy this state of things, the Commissioners propose, first, that real estate shall be taxed at its full market value; second, that moneyed corporations, whose possessions are held by permission of the Legislature and all of whose affairs are properly subject to the inspection of the officers of the State, shall be taxed according to existing laws; and third, that personal property shall be reached by taxing every man possessing it according to a designated sign of the amount he possesses. This sign is the rent or rental value of all buildings, and the land on which they are built, occupied by him. To get at the property indicated by this sign, the Commission propose to multiply the rent or rental value of buildings and land by three, and to tax the occupier, be he owner or tenant, on the amount thus ascertained, this tax to be in lieu of all further taxes on personal property of any description.

The reasoning of the Commission is, in the first place, that in this way every man will be taxed for a fair average valuation of his personal property, investigation showing that, as a rule, personal property equal to three times the rent of house or building is necessary to sustain the expenditures for living or transacting business, of which the rent forms a part. In the second place, some proportion—and the Commission deem a fair proportion—of every one's personal property is reached. There is no room for mental reservations or false swearing, as in amount of effects, or transfers to evade the law. The buildings are there—tangible, immovable, not to be concealed. The rent or rental value is capable of either ascertainment or approximation. The tenant, the hirer, the lessee, the borrower, the mortgagee, the creditor, the landlord, the owner, the lessor, the mortgagee, the debtor, the lender

WASHINGTON AFFAIRS.

Action in the Senate Yesterday on the Amnesty Bill.

Passage of Mr. Sumner's Civil Rights Amendment.

Internal Revenue Taxation—The Arkansas Election Case—Railroads Before the Committees of Congress—Miscellaneous.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Mr. SUMNER has succeeded in his desire to kill amnesty. To him belongs the responsibility of the defeat of that measure, so strongly urged by the President, and demanded by the best interests of the country. The bill today failed to receive the necessary two-thirds, was simply defeated by a vote. Suddenly gaining, tacked his Civil Rights amendment to it. Either measure would have passed separately on its merits. The Press and the country must place the responsibility of this measure where it belongs. One of the features of the debate was a written speech by Mr. TIPTON, who showed himself to be the equal of Mr. SUMNER as a rhetorical and not an ethical. He illustrated his otherwise dull speech by some dreary extracts from the last year's dreary New-York World. About 4 o'clock the vote on Mr. SUMNER's amendment was reached. As the vote proceeded it became evident that it would be very close, and at the last it was announced that the Amendment had failed. Of the Republicans, Carpenter, Cole, Corbett, Ferry of Connecticut, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Logan, Merrill of Maine, Robertson, Sawyer, Sprague, Scott, Tipton and Trumbull voted against it; Cameron, Nye and Edmunds did not vote. Senators gathered round the Clerk's desk and the floor reporter to see how the vote stood. Presently Mr. CAMERON came in and voted in the affirmative. After a short delay, the Vice-President announced the vote as 28 to 28, and then gave the casting vote in favor of the amendment, and declared it adopted. This announcement was greeted with applause by the galleries. The debate was then reopened. Mr. WILSON appealed earnestly for the bill as amended. Mr. SAWYER moved to strike out the exceptions made by the bill. This brought on a spicy debate. It being alleged by Mr. EDMUNDS that certain prominent Ku-Klux in South Carolina would thus be pardoned, Mr. NORWOOD undertook to defend the persons thus attacked, and Mr. EDMUNDS provoked rather too much for his light and inexperienced weight, the champion soldier of the Democrats, Gen. BLAIR, came to his rescue. The result was a repetition of one or two other disgraceful defeats that he has suffered at the hands of Mr. EDMUNDS, whose sarcasm put him in a terrible rage, which made his defeat the more humiliating. Mr. SCOTT made a strong statement of the facts about the Kuklux as he knew them from the investigations of his committee. MORRILL of Vermont, moved an amendment to exclude persons who had been members of the Kuklux organization from the terms of the bill, and Mr. MORTON followed with a proposed form of oath which those suspected of having been Kuklux, should take. Both these motions were adopted. About 6 o'clock the final vote was reached on the bill as amended. The Democrats, previously, had abandoned the support of the bill on account of the amendments, and Mr. SUMNER had made a final appeal for the bill as consecrated by the civil rights provision, and given Mr. SAWYER a final lashing, to which Mr. SAWYER had replied. On the final vote the Democrats, of course, voted no, and with them Logan, Merrill of Maine, Scott, Tipton, Trumbull and Wright. Carpenter, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Lewis and Schurz failed to vote. Ferry, of Connecticut, had to leave the Chamber on account of his health, and Sprague was out of the city. A few others were paired. The vote was thirty-three to nineteen—lacking five of the needful two-thirds. There is still another bill from the House granting general amnesty, which can be acted upon, and which will be taken up during some part of the session, but it is doubtful if it escapes Mr. SUMNER's disgraceful tactics. Congress has now been sitting two months, and has only succeeded in passing the Apportionment bill and a few of only trifling importance. For this result Mr. SUMNER must be held in a great measure responsible. He has held the Senate for weeks to discussion of his pet measure, when it is well understood that he has admitted in his private conversations that the only result would be what it has been—the defeat of amnesty. Seeing that he has promised to move his civil rights amendment upon every bill that he can get a chance, the prospect for future progress is not very flattering. In addition to all this it should be added that if he had contented to some slight changes in his bill, it would without doubt have passed the Senate in conjunction with the Amnesty bill by the two-thirds vote necessary for the latter. In spite of these facts, there are not wanting those who are disingenuous enough to lay the blame of the defeat of amnesty to the Administration Senators, as they call them, and even to charge that the President himself has some private understanding with them that such action should be taken.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The Ways and Means Committee are endeavoring to reach a result on the reduction of internal revenue taxation. They have got far been able to agree upon the amount which shall be taken off. The usual divisions which exist in the House on this subject also exist in the Committee, and may embarrass its action by delaying a report until both branches are ready to be reported. The statements that a uniform tax of twenty-four cents on tobacco, and that a consolidated tax on whiskey had been agreed upon, is pronounced untrue by members of the Committee. They hope to reach a result on Internal Revenue reductions next week.

WINDLOW AND GRESLEY.

The New-York Republican delegation in the House almost unanimously express their satisfaction at the complete manner in which Senator WINDLOW disposes of HORACE GREELEY's attack upon him. Most of these gentlemen have suffered unjustly from Mr. GREELEY's ungraceful and unscrupulous pen, and they enjoy his discomfiture.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The House today unseated JOHN ROWARDS, and seated THOMAS BOLES, of Arkansas, by a unanimous vote. This is the Arkansas contested election case, which bears no already upon the case of Senator CLAYTON. ROWARDS was charged with having been fraudulently granted a certificate by Gov. CLAYTON, and though he has had every opportunity, he has failed to make any defense. The vote of the Committee was unanimous and that of the House was likewise. The decisions of the Elections Committee in the Congress thus far, fully sustains the reputation it has achieved in former Congresses for the judicial and non-partisan character of its judgments.

COMMITTEE OF CLAIMS.

The House Committee of Claims has fully discussed the provisions of House bill No. 4,348, to authorize the Commissioners of Claims to appoint special Commissioners to take testimony and for other purposes; and have substantially agreed upon the amendments they will report. The bill will be reported to the House under the first call, and will probably pass with but little objection. It is important that some such measure pass, as the present Commission can hear only about one-half of the claims filed, and by this bill the claims of less than $5,000 made by persons living in the Remote Southern States also put within the possibility of prosecution.

LAND GRANTS.

The land-grant business is brought to grief in the House Committee on Public Lands, yesterday. The bill under consideration was the Salmon River route from Salt Lake City to Portland, Oregon. It was probably the strongest in Congress and four to four, vote as all votes resulted. In the end, by the casting vote of the Chairman of the Committee, Gen. BUTLER, against railroad subsidy.

The House Judiciary Committee has agreed to a report on the charges preferred a few weeks ago against the Chief Justice of the United States, Judge BRADLEY will report against the impeachment, on the ground of charges not being for the exclusive jurisdiction of the Interior Department. Messrs. BUTLER and VOORHEES will make a minority report, and Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, will on this subject, submit a bill providing for the removal of all such cases to the Supreme Court.

Slogans on the Southern Press.

NOMINATIONS.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate today: CHARLES WAINWRIGHT, Assistant Secretary of Legation in France; WM. Blackburn, of Pennsylvania, Consul at Ghent; R. C. Parsons, Assistant Surgeon in the Navy; D. WILLIAM BIXBY, to be examiner of the Court of Health of Washington, D. C.

NAVAL.

Lieut. CHAS. M. ANTHONY has been detached from the Portsmouth Navy-yard and ordered to the Pensacola. Rear-Admiral JOHN ROGERS is detached from command of the Asiatic Seat and ordered to return home, and orders have been issued to Rear-Admiral THORNTON A. JENKINS to present for the steamer of March 1 to take command of the Asiatic fleet.

MOGANNAHAN CLAIMS.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands today were, on motion of their Chairman, formally discharged from further consideration of the memorial of WM. MOGANNAHAN, which was then referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

SENATOR EVIDENCE IN SAM FALES CLAIMS.

JOHN M. BRAY, Clerk in Third Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, was arrested this afternoon, on a warrant at the instance of the Third Auditor, who charges him with stealing from the files of the office certain abstracts and evidences of indebtedness, upon which to have Fundators claims against the Government. The Third Auditor says the account need one set of members by filing them in connection with a fraudulent claim; but at present it is impossible to tell whether he ever succeeded in actually obtaining any similar claim through the office. BRAY, he is detected, the parties named them over to a supposed confederate, but who in reality was a detective employed to watch his movements. He was requited to give bail.

EX-CONGRESSMAN STOKES.

The trial of W. A. STOKES, indicted for aiding and assisting, for money, in the prosecution, as agent or attorney, of claims against the United States while he was a member of Congress and receiving a gratuity in consideration of services, ended today. The jury, after being out four hours, were unable to agree upon a verdict, and were discharged, the jury stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Committee on Army Appropriations have finished the army appropriations, which amount to over $20,000,000, including $25,000 for Willet's Point. They have now under consideration the Deficiency bill. The amounts to be appropriated foot up thus far to $2,500,000.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical.

"MARITANA" AT THE ACADEMY.

The music of poor WALLACE keeps the day of the people, and there is that about some of it which prompts regret, whenever it is heard, that the composer was not spared to do something higher and better. "Maritana," which was worthily sung last night at the Academy, contains not a few of these passages—passages which reveal the capacity for a loftier development and a wider and grander culture. It is but a short time since we had the opportunity to write with approval of Mrs. VAN ZANDT's embodiment of the heroine of this work. She sang and acted last night with more breadth and spirit than before—perhaps in a measure because more certain of the sympathy and liking of her audience—and was warmly encouraged throughout the evening. Mrs. SEGUIN is the tenderest and archest of Lazarillos, and her best songs, as heretofore, were heartily applauded and repeated. All the dash and soldierly nonchalance he is capable of are thrown into Don Cesar by Mr. CASTLE, and his "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall" is one of the most effective, if not the most meritorious of his performances. Mr. CAMPBELL is about as well suited, histrionically, in Don José as in anything, and sings the part to the great satisfaction of his public. His "In Happy Moments" was sung twice, in obedience to an unmistakable encore. Mr. SEGUIN diversifies, with much acceptable humor, a part that few could make as acceptable. Chorus and orchestra were prompt and vigorous last night, and the opera went off with uncommon spirit. Today, Mme. PARTI-ROSA sings in the "Bohemian Girl," and to-night, for the first time in New-York, will be performed CHERUBINI's "Water-Carrier."

GERMAN OPERA AT THE STADT.

"Der Tannhauser" was sung last evening at the Stadt Theatre. It would not be fair to say that the musical and scenic excellence of the opera were strictly complied with, but it may be recorded that a sufficiently smooth representation was offered to interest and often to delight that thoughtful part of the public which always flocks to performances of WAGNER's works. The magnificent, though rather unsymmetrical overture; the impressive strains of the trombones; enthusiasm of the spell of Venus; the grandeur of the march, the eloquence of the songs of the rival suitors; the elegiac and fluent beauty of the chorals in the finale of the second act, and the exquisite romance in the third were all rendered with enough effect to charm the admirer of a score which is already become music of the present. The regular artists of the Stadt co-operated in the rehearsal. Herr BERNARD, whose skill and experience go far toward concealing the wear of his voice, personated TANNHAUSER, Herr MULLER was WOLFRAM, Herr HABELMANN Walther, Frau FAHRNI Elisabeth, and Fraulein BERNETT Venus. The orchestra, under Herr MUTTER, seemed hardly as self-reliant as usual, though the correctness of the reading was unimpeachable. The peroration of the overture, for example, lacked crispness, and the execution of the march was hurried, to the impairment of the calm dignity of the theme. A second rendering of the composition will doubtless show a marked improvement in its general interpretation. Sufficient gratification was shown during the progress of the first to warrant strenuous efforts in that direction.

SARASATE-MILLS MATINEE.

The second of the series of matinees given at Steinway's smaller hall, on alternate Saturdays, by Messrs. MILLS and SARASATE, occurs this day. The programme to be recited is framed as follows:

Trio. F Major, op. 80.....Schumann
Messrs. MILLS, SARASATE and BERGNER.
Cavatina. "Betly".....Donizetti
Mrs. PHILIP D. GULIGNE.
Fantasia. On Gounod's "Faust".....Sarasate
Sehor SARASATE.
Duo. Sonata in A, op. 47.....Beethoven
Mr. S. B. MILLS and Mr. F. BERGNER.
Fantasia. "Midsummer Night's Dream".....F. Liszt
Mrs. PHILIP D. GULIGNE and Sehor SARASATE.
Song. "Love Dreams" (with violin obbligato).....Dechaine
Mrs. PHILIP D. GULIGNE and Sehor SARASATE.
Molonoche.....Pinsuti
Sehor SARASATE.
Duo for two pianos, op. 6, E Major.....Czerny
Mr. WM. F. MILLS and Mr. S. B. MILLS.

CONCERT AT CHICKERING HALL.

Chickering Hall was filled last night by a fashionable audience, the occasion being the first public musicale given by the Misses HATTIE E. and ANNA E. BULKLEY, assisted by the Von Weber Quartet, by Miss M. TORRY, violinist, and brilliant HERMANN ABARBANEL, accompanist. The Misses BULKLEY are very promising young singers, Miss HATTIE possessing a sweet soprano and Miss ANNA a rich contralto voice. "Ah quel giorno," from ROSSINI's "Semiramide," was excellently rendered by Miss ANNA E. BULKLEY. The Von Weber Quartet, comprising Messrs. BUSH, KENDALL, BECKET and HOWLAND, added much to the entertainment by the interpretation of several four-part songs. This quartet is already known to the musical world, and their performance last evening was among their best. Mr. BECKET was in good condition, and he sang the solo "My Queen" with his usual finish. The quartet "Rose Quel Fiore," by COSTA, given by the Misses BULKLEY, Messrs. BUSH and BECKET, was well received. Miss TORRY played with her wonted sweetness and expressiveness, and was accompanied by a hearty encore. The performance, in toto, was very enjoyable.

THE TRIBUNE AND BALL.

Severe Vituperation of the Tribune Continued—Statement of a Gendarmes Statement About the Grand Jury.

The Tribune finds itself still driven to write more lies to cover up the lie of Wednesday, about Mayor HALL's indictment. Its City editor stated yesterday that the reporter whom he sent to listen at the keyhole of the Grand Jury room heard a "noisy discussion," which he set down Friday—rather thinks was on the "question of indicting Mayor HALL." He thereupon takes that the indictment will be "found today." As we have said before, if the City editor had sent his reporter over to the Times to wait for news, as he is in the habit of doing, he might have saved himself the necessity of lying in a way which must be very distasteful to the great and good HORACE GREELEY—who, as Senator WINDLOW has showed, never deviated from the truth.

There is no foundation for the report that Dr. COMSTOCK has endeavored to induce the Grand Jury to withdraw their indictment of Mayor HALL.

The Tribune yesterday made the following statement—it is supposed in reference to Col. KNOX of the Grand Jury. These remarks may or may not be just, but they come with a bad grace from the Tribune:

"Only an official connected with the jury or a juryman could speak with positiveness, and then only by violating an oath. And as all oath-breakers are naturally liars, none such could be cited as good authority. All that is positively known, regarding the treatment of HALL is that angry discussion has revealed that a majority of the jury favor returning a bill against him."

THE GRAND JURY.

Approaching the Close of the Long Session—Bail and Civil Indemnities to be Formally Presented—What They Will Do Today.

The Grand Jury did not meet yesterday, having adjourned over until today. The indictments found by the Jury during the past week will then be formally presented to Judge RUMSEY, when, it is understood, they will ask to be discharged from further labor. This is a week earlier than was contemplated when they asked for a two weeks' extension, but they have finished the business before them with more dispatch than was expected. The Jury have yet decided to reconsider their action in the indictments against HALL and SWEENY, but will present them as agreed on Monday last, as was published exclusively in the TIMES, and denied in the Tribune next day.

The joint indictment against HALL, CONNOLLY, TWEED and PETER B. SWEENY, will also, it is said, on good authority, be among those to be handed in by the District Attorney. Other indictments against a number of persons whose names have not yet transpired, may also be expected to be handed in.

Judge BEDFORD, Recorder HACKETT and NELSON J. WATERBURY, Esq., were in close conference with District Attorney GARVIN in the afternoon. Judge BEDFORD will address the Jury in a speech of considerable length, in reply to the address of the foreman, and the proceedings will probably be of an important and interesting character.

THE RING THIEVES.

Around the City Hall—Tweed & Co.'s Compromises.

Yesterday rumors were as plentiful and as improbable as usual around the City Hall. The most important of the lot was that DOWNEROLL had at last arrived in the City. It was, however, upon ascertained by our reporters that that much-desired event had not yet taken place, and is not very likely to, under the present state of affairs. In the afternoon there was a brief ripple of excitement occasioned by the circulation of the news that the Supplementary Audit bill had passed both Houses, and would go to the Governor immediately. The statement that TWEED, SWEENY and CONNOLLY had their minions busy in attempting to compromise with the Reformers for $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 gained much credence yesterday in political circles as very like the tactics of the Ring now that they are at the mercy of the law.

It was said by those who pretended to know all about it that the grand jury, which is to meet, when the indictments the Grand Jury will bring in today before making the final arrangement. TWEED was at his office in Duane-street the greater part of the day, but beyond the visit of a deputation of politicians from one of the uptown Wards, no one of any secretly called him. Sheriff BRENNAN expects that today will be a busy one with him, and therefore has ordered out his full force of men on duty throughout the day. He has received the bench warrants for WILLIAM HENRY COOK, charging him with forgery to the amount of over $100,000, and a half million of bribery. COOK was in London six weeks ago, but an intimate friend of his said yesterday that he is now in Canada, but this is believed to be a mistake, if not a falsehood, as COOK has several reasons for remaining in England.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

Committee of Seventy—Meeting Last Night.

Mr. JAMES M. BROWN, the Vice-Chairman, presided at the meeting of the Committee of Seventy, last evening, which was called on a telegram received from Albany, from Hon. EDWARD SALOMON, Chairman of the Committee on Legislation. Soon after a that gentleman arrived, accompanied by his associate of the Committee on Legislation, and Secretary of the General Committee, Mr. SIMON STERNE, and followed rapidly by Hon. JOHN WHEELER and Mr. JOSEPH HEUWENTAL of the Special Albany Committee.

The meeting was organized immediately, and Ex-Gov. SALOMON made a statement of the status of affairs in Albany, especially in relation to legislation in the interests of reform in this City, closing by inviting a general attendance of the members of the Committee in Albany, at least until a final vote is taken on the charter. There was an almost immediate response to the invitation, and for some time to come the Committee on Legislation will be strengthened by the presence of Henry Clews, Benjamin H. Sherman, Samuel B. Ruggles, George W. Lane, Reuben W. Howes, Roswell D. Hatch, Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, Charles Cleary, and other well-known citizens and members of the Committee.

In the course of the evening short and earnest addresses on the necessity of gathering for the people the fruits of their triumph at the polls in November last, were made by Ex-Gov. Salomon, Hon. John Wheeler, Hon. Samuel B. Ruggles, Hon. John Foley, Joseph Hunnewell, Esq., Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, Henry N. Beers, Esq., and others.

The meeting was adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

Payments by the Controller.

Controller GREEN, through City Paymaster WHALEN, was engaged in paying off, yesterday, the small-pipe men their wages for December. The aggregate amount of the rolls for this month is $6,000. The Controller also paid the Department of Public Parks $69,000, to be discharged to the income of that department. Arrangements are being made by the Controller for payment at an early day of the claims of the inspectors, policemen and landlords incurred at the last election.

Warrants Issued by the Mayor.

Yesterday afternoon Mayor HALL signed warrants to pay the Police for December $[illegible], the Park laborers for the same month, $[illegible], and to pay JOHN E. WILLIAMS and FERDINAND D. TAFFIN for advertisements made as follows: On per-rolls of engineers and assistants now laborers on the line of alteration of Croton Aqueduct, from Ninety-third to One Hundred and Fifty-ninth street, up to Aug. 31, $[illegible]; same up to Sept. 14, $[illegible]; same up to Sept. 30, $[illegible]—total, $[illegible].

Proposed Abolition of the Brokers' Tax.

The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange held a special meeting yesterday, at which the Law Committee was instructed to act as a bureau of claims, with a view to inducing Congress to repeal the tax of one-twenty-fourth of one per cent. intimate collected on capital employed by brokers in their business, and to repeal the law under which the tax is imposed. The brokers argue that the revenue derived by the United States in which this tax is levied is that within which Wall-street is located, and that the tax is unjust. The Law Committee will bring the matter to the attention of Congress.

THE TRIBUNE'S NEWS.

[illegible]

WILLIAM C. RUNYAN, who was Tweed's partner, has made the following statement:

I hereby acknowledge that I had, as a member of the United Security Life Insurance Company, detective officers attached to the Fourth Police Precinct of the City of Brooklyn, that WILLIAM C. RUNYAN, who was by a young man on the corner of the avenue of Fulton, about 10 o'clock, entered the Sunday school room of the Baptist Church, in Clinton-street, where it was supposed that PARSONS had taken the latter place. And I confess that I had no other evidence of the alleged facts contained in the foregoing statement made by me to Detective CORE; that he learned from other detectives to be true; and I, from my own knowledge, and by myself, without any conviction or provocation, for my to Gang. I do therefore, now, voluntarily and without intimidation or compulsion, apologize to WILLIAM C. RUNYAN, his family, and friends for having committed an uncalled for act of abuse, and express my sorrow for having allowed myself to be used in my capacity as a detective officer, to circulate and I pronounce the defamatory and slanderous statements alluded to, to be made by me, utterly false, and without foundation in truth.

(Signed) HUGH MITCHEL.

Brief News.

JOHN BUCKLEY, liquor dealer, was arrested yesterday, charged with violations of the internal revenue laws, and held in $1,000 bail by Judge Benedict.

JOHN WEBSTER, fifty-eight years of age, fell down the third-story of his house, No. 31 Woodhull-street, while intoxicated, at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and received fatal injuries.

The proportionate number of cases of small-pox reported, and deaths therefrom, for last week and the present, up to yesterday, are as follows: Last week, 48 cases and 19 deaths; for the present week, 56 and 20 deaths.

A tea-party was given, yesterday afternoon and evening, at the Brooklyn Institute, in aid of the Third Unitarian Society. Brief addresses were delivered by Dr. BELLOWS, Rev. Mr. HALE of Boston, and Rev. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago.

JULIA HOLLAHAN was tried in the Court of Sessions yesterday, on a charge of receiving goods stolen by her daughter MARGARET. She was acquitted and the girl arraigned for grand larceny, found guilty, and ordered to be confined in the Refuge for Juvenile Delinquents.

ALBERT KEPLER was tried before Justice DELMAS, yesterday, for stabbing in the wrist JACOB SCHNEIDER, on the 24 of December last. The two men boarded in the same house, and got into a quarrel, upon which the stabbing is supposed to have been done. KEPLER was acquitted.

A notorious New-York sneak thief, JOHNNY SMITH, alias Billy Thompson, alias Bob Scott, was arrested on Broadway, E. D., Thursday, and yesterday morning his residence was visited by an officer, a large quantity of wearing apparel found, and a woman who passed as the wife of SMITH arrested there.

A fire broke out yesterday afternoon, in the grocery store of HENRY HEELDIER, corner Atlantic and Vanderbilt avenues. Damage to the extent of $5,000 was done. Loss on stock, $1,500, insured in the Germania Insurance Company $1,000. The adjoining house, occupied as a liquor-store, was damaged $2,000.

The suits of MADDEN and MAHONEY against the Prairie Island Railroad Company, two actions for damages arising from the West-field collision, were called for trial in the City Court, yesterday. Counsel for the defendants asked for an adjournment, on the ground that Mr. BEACH, who had been retained, was away. The motion was opposed by counsel for the plaintiffs, but it was finally allowed. Judge MULLIGAN set down the cases for the third Monday of the present month.

Two Hundred Men Discharged in Consequence of a Strike—Closing of the Elizabethport Cordage Works.

A number of employes at the Elizabethport Cordage-works struck yesterday morning. It had been the custom for the Company to pay once every fortnight, but yesterday being pay day, the Superintendent informed the men that it would be more convenient to pay once a month. Upon finding they were not to receive their money, nearly fifty of the men refused to work longer. The Company then dismissed all hands, some 200 in number, and closed the works.

The Hearth & Home has a bright, cheerful number, dedicated to that merry little fellow, St. Valentine. On the outer page is a charming picture of a young girl, called "The Straw Hat," and inside several delightfully humorous ones, more or less closely connected with the worship of the Patron Saint of the week. The reading matter also assumes a fitting rosy hue, though the plain and prosaic, who have left behind them their youthful follies, are not forgotten. Among the latter it would, perhaps, be fair just to include Jean Ingelow's story, "Off the Skerries," which is continued. There is also a quantity of other very readable matter.

Overcrowding of Visitors to the Capital—Gaudy Street Styles—An American Sculptor—An American Commissioner—The Charm of Prints.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Thursday, Jan. 18, 1872.

As all as well know, to make the acquaintance of artists, to visit their studios, and to learn by sympathetic intercourse to see moments of their art recoverers, and share hopes and doubts of public appreciation of their labors, are having the agreeable occupation of old and new visitors to Rome. With an experience of twenty years, we have a right to be classed among old observers; but art is so profound and inexhaustible that the more we see the more we become distrustful of our judgment; while at the same time the aesthetic faculty becomes more exacting in its demands, and the taste is less easily satisfied. Artists are so sensitive that one runs the risk of sacrificing a personal friendship by any criticism of their works; and as we have been fashion to say look and learn about them, except when something is produced of a quality of sufficient excellence to demand a word of praise. There has been so much indiscriminate and thoughtless newspaper writing about artists, with exaggerated analyses of their talents and their works, that those with true merit and self-respect among them have sometimes turned away with a feeling of aversion from these inflated adulations of well-meaning friends. In a society with crude notions of art, or in which few or none of its ripe fruits have been gathered, when the pen is taken up by some aspirant ambitious of a reputation for critical knowledge, we are pretty sure to be treated to a discourse which will do little toward dissipating our ignorance, or instructing us in just principles of taste. The temptation is great to become teachers of others when we ourselves have only taken our first lesson. How many Raphaels and Michael Angelos have been found by these enterprising discoverers as soon as they have begun their search! Out of the American forest are coming every year the children of genius who are going to prove that Nature distributes her gifts according to her own exalted caprices, or, in better phrase, according to her own divine will. This at least is true enough, that genius, which has taken on a clothing of flesh, does not depend upon the well springs from which ancestors have drunk, or the food upon which they have been fed. Original power is nature's own gift, but we should not run into the extreme of putting too small a value upon the training of schools. There are well-established and very severe principles of art, and the science of the beautiful has its own laws.

AN AMERICAN SCULPTOR.

Two years ago there was completed here a statue of ROGER WILLIAMS, of whose excellence a high opinion was expressed by some of the best judges in Rome; a judgment which was confirmed by public approbation in America. Mr. SIMMONS has produced some works since which show a steady progress in improvement, and encourage the belief that if the same power of patient application is continued to him, the artist will yet give us works which will win the highest favor. But statue-making, or portraiture, does not demand a very elevated order of talent, although the highest success in this branch of art may obtain for the artist a widespread and permanent fame. Mr. SIMMONS has made a great many busts and portraits in bas-so-relievo, and has done many of them well; but from what we have lately seen, we are inclined to believe that in a higher walk of art, his best efforts are to be made. Several smaller ideal statues, made during the past two or three years, have shown not only that the artist has inventive power, but a fine sense of grace of proportions and a delicate hand for the processes of manipulation. But the work which is, without doubt, to attract attention and be admired by intelligent lovers of art, is the group to which, in the clay, the last touches have just been given. Sculptors as well as painters of mediocre ability must go through their Ruth and Hagar, and other trifles of design, which require little artistic invention. They are the whooping-cough, chicken-pox and measles of youthful beginnings—the small first-fruits of a timid inexperience. Mr. SIMMONS, for his last work, to which reference has been made, has chosen a Scripture subject—"Jochabed Holding in Her Lap the Infant Moses." It is not unfrequently the case that those who write or talk about art, giving free play to the fancy, discover some miraculous beauty, or subtle meaning, in a work of sculpture or painting, which the artist who produced it never dreamed of. Some of the poetry of an exalted idealism a work of art must certainly possess to make it worthy of a place among productions in which is displayed creative power. The imagination has an important part to play, not so much in assisting our judgments as our enjoyments of the symbols, or images made palpable to the senses which act proxeno to us. In the "Madonna" and "Child of the Religion" of the old dispensation, Mr. SIMMONS has produced a work which includes not only historic claims but those of idealism, as well as anything that we remember in that range of art. The life of the great Jewish lawgiver is a passage of sublime romance. How can the artist put into the eyes of the mother of the child-man, chosen of God, the infinite, sorrowful earnestness which looks into the future of to-morrow, with its perils for her son, and into the future of a thousand years, with its glories for the law-giver of half the world? A part of the majestic symbolism of the Hebrew religion we cannot reject. Its belongs to us as distant relatives and heirs of the chosen people of God, and our claim will be good, and it must continue to be done as long as the Decalogue remains the statute law of Christendom. From the one we may draw our morals, and from the other our poetry and design.

SYMBOLICAL WORKS.

Were it possible for the Jewish to become a popular religion, or one of propagandism, such symbols as these would be effective instruments for presenting it to the human mind. The image of maternity, such as we have set before us in the Virgin Mother holding in her arms the Divine Child; is that which appeals, as can no other, to the universal sympathies of the race of man. The Catholic Church long ago appropriated the symbol, and a few years back gave to it a final and divine consecration. Such thoughts as these are suggestive to the mind by the admirable work of art, to a notice of which I have felt called upon to give so much space. It is not going beyond the truth to say that the Jochebed and Moses is as fine a production of ideal art as has yet been given to us by American talent. The eminent Italian historian, CESARE CANTU, lately paid a visit to the studio of Mr. SIMMONS, and I have reason for believing that he gave it as his opinion that this work of our countryman is the best that has lately been produced in the studios of Rome.

AN AMERICAN COMMISSION.

It may be mentioned that the sculptor is now busy here in the execution of the figures for the naval monument to be erected at Annapolis, for which a contract was signed last year with Admiral POLTER, the Commissioner in whose hands is placed the direction of the work. Mr. SIMMONS' design for the monument was, in fact, adopted two or three years ago. It is hoped that in three years from now the work will be completed. In ornament the architectural part of the design there will be five figures larger than life; or, to borrow one in artistic phrase, Two of these, to surmount the structure, will represent Geist and History; while lower down will be placed figures and devices symbolical of the naval service. The design, as it appears on paper, is impressive and noble, and we can only hope that the execution will be found worthy of the Heroic craft for which we all have so much admiration. Every year is added a new monumental emblem to illustrate the great passages in the national history, in which so many now living have been actors, and the whole country proudly world spectators.

THE CHARM OF PRINTS.

Praise is sweet to an artist. As the vail falls upon his perfected work, he longs to hear the VIRGINIA.

Annual Convention of the State Republican Committee—Preliminary Reorganization of the State Committee—The Public Debt.

From Our Own Correspondent.

RICHMOND, Va., Wednesday, Feb. 7, 1872.

A State Republican Convention has been called by the State Republican Committee, to assemble in this city on the 17th of April. The principal object of the Convention is to select delegates to the National Republican Convention, to meet at Philadelphia, to nominate Presidential candidates, but other matters will doubtless come up. There is some dissatisfaction with the present State Committee, and it will probably be reorganized by the Convention. The Committee, in addition to calling a State Convention, passed a resolution asking Congress to amend the Bankrupt law, so as to make its exemptions conform to those allowed under the Homestead laws of the different States.

The public debt of Virginia is still under hot discussion in the House of Delegates. There are now three different propositions pending. The first is the bill reported from the Joint Special Committee by the majority, which agrees to pay interest on only two-thirds of the old debt of the State, said interest to be paid as follows: Three per cent. per annum for the first twelve years, six per cent. for the next ten years, and nine per cent. for the remaining twelve years of the thirty-four years that the new bonds have to run. It repeals the receivability of coupons for taxes, and utterly repudiates the remaining third of the old debt so far as Virginia is concerned, turning the creditors for that portion over to the mercies of West Virginia. The second proposition is a bill reported by the minority of the same Joint Special Committee. It repudiates substantially one-third of the old debt, but merely suspends the receivability of coupons for taxes, and agrees to pay four per cent. interest this year and until otherwise ordered by law. The remaining two per cent. of interest is to be certificated and paid from time to time from any surplus in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The third scheme comes from Col. O'FERRALL, who is considered the leader of the republicans in the House, and is an utter denial of Virginia's obligation under the old contracts, because she was conquered, dismembered and her sovereignty wholly destroyed by the United States, but proposes to issue bonds on the public lands and buildings to run thirty-four years, and to bear six per cent. interest. It is estimated that on this delightful plan the debt will be reduced to about $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. I do not think that the last project will be seriously entertained at all by the House. The fight will be between the friends of the two bills from the Joint Special Committee, and the Assembly will probably adjourn before either becomes a law—thus leaving the old funding bill of the last Legislature intact.

The public schools of Richmond appear to be flourishing. During the month of January the number of schools enrolled was 4,836, of which 2,610 were white and 1,726 were colored. Two additional schools for colored children were opened during the month. E.

THE TURF.

Its Status and Increase in Popularity—Remarkable Progress in Speed of Horses—Necessity of Uniformity in Ages and Weights.

The very rapid strides turf sports are making are well known to the general reader. It will be perceived by those who interest themselves in the welfare of the running turf that we are gradually approaching the extreme height in speed of which the thoroughbred horse is capable, a fact all enthusiastic turfmen are looking forward to the time when the existing "fastest time" will be beaten, and their great ambition is to own the horse that will erase the names of Salina and Felladen from the records as fastest runners for the distance of a mile. In the coming season we may expect, should no untoward accidents happen, to see the famous time beaten. The great Lexington's time of 7:19¾ for four miles will probably not be beaten, although there is much talk of Harry Bassett's ability of performing the feat. It is to be hoped, at all events, that he will be allowed the trial. Col. McDANIEL, his owner, has already made an offer to stake offset for a very large amount of money, $25,000 a side, though too large a sum to hope for an acceptance. Probably the Colonel thinks the feat a hazardous one, and places the monetary value of its undertaking in proportion.

How many seconds better than 7:19¾ (the fastest time on record) the speed of the horse may reach, can be conjectured from the performance of the great horse Longfellow, for the Saratoga Cup last year, in which the judges timed the first mile in the race in 1:40, but which does not go upon the record in consequence of the feat being performed in a race of two and a quarter miles.

It will, under the circumstances, be useless and serve no purpose, to hazard a guess as to the figures that will eventually mark the capacity of the thoroughbred, for the human being who pressed a mile in 1:40 in the year gone by would have been pronounced demented. The enterprising Saratoga Association has issued a programme offering extra premiums to the breeders as an incentive for "fast time" efforts.

Of late years the turf has demanded by its interest superiority as a royal sport; the protection of the rich and respectable guards it from the vulgarism that would share in its prosperity. The social status of the turf is above all others, a matter of congratulation. Time, the great conservator of all things, has indeed wrought a wondrous change. Fashion now issues her edicts from the grand stands of our courses at Fordham, at Saratoga, Long Branch and Baltimore, during the race meetings.

The remarkable growth of the turf underthese potent influences is surprising, even to those who have watched and studied its progress for years. By the turf statistics recently published it appears that the number of races run in 1871 was nearly double that of the year 1865. If we come to figures, it will be seen that what has been said as to the increase of speed attained by our horses is entirely true. Taking a certain point, we may consider 1:45 as fast time, and taking those figures as indicating the development of superior speed, we propose to look back four years, and show in that comparatively short space of time the rate of progression. In the retrospect we find that in 1867 there were but nine heats of the mile heat and dash races run in 1:45 and under. In 1868 there were twenty-three. In 1870 there were thirty-one, and in 1871 there were forty-four. In considering the increase of speed the reader must bear in mind that within the last two years some of the Association have increased the weights considerably, and, therefore, the gain in speed is more notable than could be gleaned by a hasty and superficial glance. Further comment is, therefore, unnecessary. Some time ago the question of uniformity in running associations, similar to that of the trotting associations, was agitated, but the subject seems to have been dropped. The idea was a good one, and if carried out, could not fail to be beneficial in its results, even if the Assembly did nothing more than to agree upon a standard of weights, and a date common to all sections of the country of reckoning the age of horses. The reason for the suggestion is obvious. We should sooner arrive at a conclusion as to the superiority of one horse over another, without a conflict of opinions as to the difference in time by the carrying of Northern or Southern weights, and at the same time avoid the anomaly which we shall see in the coming Spring, of a horse running at the Metairie Jockey Club Meeting as a two or three year old, carrying the prescribed weights for those ages, and the following week running at the meeting of the Louisville Jockey Club as one of four or five year olds. This or some affairs arises from the fact that the Louisiana Jockey Club has adopted the rule of our associations in this vicinity, dating the age of the horses from the 1st day of January, while the Metairie Club clings to the Southern idea of dating ages lower the last day of the year. Intelligent turfmen must see that this is wrong, and a unity of counsel is all that is necessary to remedy it. The subject is surely worthy of consideration.

The Return of Mr. Charles F. Adams.

From the Springfield Republican, Feb. 6.

The return home of Mr. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS has nothing to do with the present flurry of England because of the American claims for damages, Adams is the Alabama matter. Which Board of Arbitration, of which he is so important a member, it will be remembered, has taken a recess until June; and he comes home, by previous arrangement, to get his wife, who is in ill health, and take her over with him in the Spring.

SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

To the Editor of the New-York Tribune:

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of New-York, providing for the appointment of a commission to be charged for the use of the Seventh Regiment of New-York City. I have the bill before me. I beg leave to call your attention to the following lines in the act: "Such commissioners shall have power and be empowered to rent and charge for the use of said Regiment such sums as to them shall seem proper, and to do all other acts necessary for the proper carrying into effect the intent and purpose of said act."

This is passing strange for less than a month. I think that the taxpayers have had enough of armories. The City ought to have, and must have, every dollar that belongs to it, to pay debts due. The surrounding property-holders cannot afford to have their property ruined in "double-quick time," nor will they either.

I own and represent 210 feet in Fourteenth-street, and will have my rights; the other property-holders will demand theirs. As a last resort I will bind myself to buy this ground, and deposit the money, although I doubt if it could be sold, as the City sold the property and based on the assessment in purchasers that this ground would be less as a square. This square is worth near one million dollars, and why the City should have this amount taken away I cannot understand. FIFTH AVENUE.

The following is a copy of the bill in question:

AN ACT to provide a site for an armory and drill-room for the Seventh Regiment of the National Guard of the State of New-York.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City of New-York are hereby authorized and required to lease to the field Officers, for the time being, of the Seventh Regiment of the National Guard of the State of New-York, and their successors in office acting for said regiment, all that portion of Reservoir square, in the City of New-York, which lies north of a line commencing at a point on Sixth-avenue, one hundred and twenty-seven feet and six inches northerly from the corner of Fortieth-street and Sixth-avenue, and running thence easterly and parallel with Fortieth-street to the Reservoir, and south of a line commencing at a point on Sixth-avenue, one hundred and twenty-seven feet and six inches southerly from the corner of Forty-second-street and Sixth-avenue, and running thence easterly and parallel with Forty-second-street to the reservoir, said premises being bounded by the said lines, after which no word remains without sense. The Commissioners are not yet known to the Police.

THE LONG ISLAND RING.

A Round Sum Which Has Stolen Could Have Been Saved Over the Rich manals Only. Strategy of the Schemers—The Commissioners to be Called to Account.

During the session of the Legislature of 1869 a bill was passed authorizing the construction of a road from the foot of Ferry-street, Hunter's Point, to Flushing, a distance of about one mile and a quarter. The act authorized three Commissioners to lay out and construct the road, and to condemn all objects, and assess the amount of land damage incurred by the improvement. It was further provided that half the expense should be paid by the property owners directly benefited, while the remaining half should be assessed on the property, real and personal, of the town of Newtown, and the Board of Supervisors were directed to levy such tax in the usual manner as the Commissioners notified to them the amount necessary.

The Commissioners named by the act were CHARLES STRONG, PETER T. COVERT and THOS. M. EVANS. The bill was passed May 1, 1869, and by its terms the work was to be completed by July 1, 1869, the compensation of the Commissioners being fixed at $5 per day.

On the 1st of December, 1869, these gentlemen made a report on oath to the Board of Supervisors, setting forth that they had a survey taken, estimated the total cost of the road and assessed the amount of damages payable to property-owners. That report stated the land damages to be $5,100, cost of the road construction $20,000, making a total of $25,100.

The Supervisors thereupon acting in conformity with the law, placed $12,500—half the estimated cost—in the tax levy against the town of Newtown. There were no assessments for the expenditure of a cent more than that by the town. But this limitation of expenditure, though it was adopted by the Commissioners themselves, had little to do with the actual cost of the improvement. Contracts were given out and work on the road commenced and proceeded with rapidly and vigorously, that the whole estimate could not have sufficed. In this crisis of affairs a happy thought struck the Commissioners. More money must be had somehow, but they knew that there was no money in the Treasury. The Legislature was again appealed to—not for any additional appropriation—oh, no, but simply to give power to the Supervisor of the town and the Town Clerk to issue bonds to the contractors as fast as their work was completed, and so certified to be by the Commissioners. The thing worked splendidly. The Supervisors issued the bonds, and the Commissioners signed them as fast as they signed a bond as earlier the Commissioners in giving certificates. The road was finished in the time stipulated, and the Commissioners then made their final report to the Board of Supervisors, and it stands on record thus:

For road making	$23,970 00
Commissioners' expenses	3,100 00
Engineer and surveyor	2,250 00
Land damages	5,300 00
Bridges	27,700 00
Total	$62,320 00

The original estimate as sworn to, it will be seen, was $25,100, while the actual cost came to about $62,000. A grosser swindle was probably never attempted by the most barefaced Tammany plunderer.

The Newtown Reform Association, which has already succeeded in having the Justices and constables' bill of that town cut down from $24,000 to a little over $5,000, are now throwing light on this job, and the Commissioners may feel pretty sure of a thorough exposure.

END OF A NOTED CRIMINAL.

The Last of Hildebrand—He is Hung by a Mob in Milwaukee.

From the Detroit Advertiser, Feb. 7.

CHARLES HILDEBRAND, once a noted horse-thief, was hung by a mob on Friday night last, at Hancock Station, in Pulaski County, Mo., on suspicion of being one of a gang of thieves who had been operating along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. He was about thirty years of age. His mother lives a short distance from Dearborn, in this State. For one of his years he had a bad reputation, arising, however, considerably from his practice of relating many terrible stories concerning himself, which, undoubtedly, had their origin only in his imagination. About five years since he stole a horse and buggy at Milwaukee, and subsequently he was arrested at his mother's house by Superintendent BORGMAN and Detective STADLER, and was arrested by the latter, and taken back to Milwaukee, where he was convicted and sent to prison for several years.

Soon after being released he returned to his home. Last Summer he came to this city, and soon got into trouble, and called at the Police Headquarters of M. S. SMITH & Co. and informed them that a plan had been set on foot to rob their store, and he offered, in consideration of a sum of money being paid him, to give information that would secure the robbers. As requested, he "called again," and was turned over into the custody of Capt. BRAMAN, and an effort was made to send him to prison as a vagrant, but he proved too "wise," and the authorities were reluctantly compelled to release him.

He, however, offered to leave the city on condition that he should be released, and he went a week or so and he turned up in St. Joseph, Mo., where he was immediately established on the day of his release he visited the editorial rooms of the Herald of that city and gave one of the reporters a highly-colored narrative of his career of crime, which was in substance the same that he gave to one of the newspapers here. He announced, as he did here, that he intended to reform, but the mob read his "biography" and concluded that his pretended reformation was a sham and took his life as before stated. Thus he was cheated there is barely room for doubt. While none his actions were more those of an escaped lunatic than anything else.

The Jamel Ejectment Suit—Address of Mr. O'Conor.

Mr. O'CONOR continued his opening speech for the defense yesterday. He reviewed in detail the evidence of the various witnesses brought forward by the plaintiff, attacked the superstructure of fable which he said the other side had constructed, and showed the alleged contradictions in stories which the numerous witnesses had told. He said that every circumstance in the life of Mme. JUMEL, as such, militated against the idea that she, in social conversation with acquaintances, had acknowledged that before her marriage she was a common street-walker in Providence, and had been the mother of an illegitimate child. He said a number of witnesses had stated that she was intense pride; that she, when marriage had put into her hands a large fortune, had carefully concealed the fact of her undoubtedly humble origin, and had gone so far as to represent that her maiden name was ELIZABETH BROWN. Was it likely, counsel asked, that she could be ready to impart information of the character ascribed to her, so as to state that she had been one of the communest women in the town of Providence? The evidence of Mrs. VANDER VOORT was scrutinized with great severity. Never, he said, had a witness been more cool, circumspect or consistent in her replies for could be readily imagined. Witnesses have been conducted more coolly, or with as little in it leading to confuse the witness, than the examination of that person; she it was who had constructed this improbable story of the plaintiff being Mme. JUMEL's son, and in the expectation of sharing the proceeds of that fraud, she had urged the plaintiff in his old age to engage in the wild mazes of suit. He (Mr. O'CONOR) would show that that woman's evidence was utterly in contradiction to all the facts, and he begged the jury to decide impartially and give their verdict for truth and justice.

At the conclusion of Mr. O'CONOR's address the Court adjourned till Monday, Judge SHIPMAN stating that his presence was required in Connecticut.

Unexpected Arrest of Burglars.

Early yesterday morning Patrolman CONROY, of the Sixth Precinct, saw a coach in Centre-street, near City Hall, with the lamps unlighted, and, upon his stopping it, two men jumped out and ran in opposite directions. An alarm rap was given, and one of the men being caught by Officer MONAGHAN, the other fell at Baxter and Leonard streets, breaking his leg. CONROY secured the coach and driver, and all the party were taken to the Franklin-street Station-house, where the vehicle was searched and found to contain cloth and silk worth $1,000, the proceeds of a burglary committed in Hoboken. The prisoner, who broke his leg, and who gave his names as JOHN DUNN, was taken to the Park Hospital, and the other two, who gave their names as JOHN MONAGHAN and JOHN CONROY, were arraigned at the Tombs. The latter is said to be an old offender, and with MONAGHAN, was sent to New-Jersey for trial.

The Methodist Book Committee.

The second day's session of the annual meeting of the Methodist Book Committee was held yesterday. Dr. BROOKS presided, and Dr. BINGHAM acted as Secretary. The session, which lasted from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M., was mostly consumed in the reading and consideration of the annual report, embracing the financial exhibit of the Concern. The report was referred to a subcommittee to examine the details of the reports of the agents in various cities, and to general agents in this City. It is expected that the Committee will finish their labors today, when the body will adjourn. The salaries of the Bishops, agents and editors were agreed upon, and a number of accompanies of minor importance read, when the Committee adjourned until 9 o'clock this morning.

THE INTERNATIONAL.

Lecture from Hon. Geo. F. Hoar, of Massachusetts—What the Hand on Dial Represents—Its Ability.

In introducing the bill for a Labor Commission, which was passed by Congress a few weeks since—Hon. George F. HOAR, of Massachusetts, made an allusion to the International, which being incorrectly reported, attracted the comment in various newspapers. With Mr. HOAR's consent, the Cincinnati Union publishes the following private letter from him, written in answer to an inquiry about sources of information regarding the Society:

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30, 1872.

MY DEAR SIR: A work on Strikes by EOCARIUS; an article in Fraser's Magazine of about May, 1871, entitled "Agrarian Labor Combinations, or something like it; an article in London Times of about October, of several columns, the Formnightly Review for the past five or six years, series; these, and many newspaper articles, of which Mr. McPherson, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, can give you more information, as far as I know, about the Internationale.

There was nothing about it in the bill to which you refer. The newspapers reported me as saying, in a few remarks which I made to introducing it, that the Internationale was a product of the leading minds of Europe." I did not say that, but merely that a meeting in England which adopted some rules which I quoted was composed of their leading minds (that is, the leading minds of the Internationale) from different countries of Europe.

I then expressed, and now have, intense sympathy with the Internationale, for the same. The four things on which I understand them to be agreed are:

1. That there is a relation existing between the laboring men of different countries stronger than that which attaches them to their respective governments.

2. That they will not permit their rulers any longer to use them as instruments for making war on each other, or for lowering wages by using the working men of different countries to underbid each other.

3. That they will take all means to throw light on the condition of the working classes everywhere by gathering documents and thorough statistical information.

4. That education at the public charge is to be insisted on as the right of every man, not as the indispensable condition of a remedy for existing evils.

I do not at this moment think of anything else in which the Internationale can be said to be committed itself. Perhaps some members have generally expressed their belief that natural wealth, as they term it, should not be permitted to be engrossed by individuals to any considerable degree, that that also may be termed one of their doctrines. I am not aware that they are agreed on any measure to prevent this, or even agreed that it can be prevented by any direct exertion of public authority.

Of course, such a movement cannot go far without attracting to itself many violent and visionary schemes, and many wild hopes which are indispensable to all premature industry and to human society itself. It is not surprising that after so many centuries of ignorance the laboring classes should themselves be sometimes deluded by such men. But I am not one of those who would say, "Move not foolish to restore the sight of the blind." They see men only as trees walking." It is the old disease, and not the new health, which distorts the vision for a time. The existing order of things in every principal European State, in crushing true ignorance and poverty millions of human souls, causes every year crimes a thousand-fold greater than all the excesses of the Commune.

I meant when I took up my pen only to answer your question. I see I have been led to write much more, which pray excuse.

I am, yours, very respectfully,

GEO. F. HOAR.

Care for the Historical Records of Virginia.

From the Richmond Enquirer, Feb. 3.

Dr. PALMER, who was appointed recently under the bill introduced by Mr. WITHE, to take charge of, collect and arrange the papers of historical value, which are now scattered through the lofts and cellars of the Capitol building, has been at his work about ten days. He has already proceeded far enough in his investigations to confirm the wisdom of the small appropriation made for this purpose by the General Assembly, and has discovered a bundle of papers (about 100) of a character before unknown to exist, giving the details of the Gabriel insurrection which broke out in Henrico County in 1802. And these papers establish the important fact that that movement among the blacks, instead of being a local affair, as is supposed by most persons, was general, so far as the counties of Henrico and Hanover were concerned. As the doctor's work progresses, we shall, no doubt, be gratified with the unearthing of many precious manuscripts and documents of historical and legal value. The appropriation for this purpose was the first ever made, and the Commonwealth in her ninety-ninth year now takes the very first step to rescue and decipher the most interesting colonial and revolutionary history belonging to any State of the United States.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

No business was transacted at the Exchange yesterday, Feb. 9, and on the street the market was quiet. Today, at the Exchange, BLACKWELL & CO. announce the sale, by order of the Supreme Court, under the direction of Wm. W. GOODRICH, Esq., referee, of the premises known as No. 104 East Twenty-third-street, embracing a four-story brown-stone house and lot, the latter being in size 25 by 98.9. In our report of Saturday, the Exchange, for real estate, we said on Thursday, that sale for property on Twenty-seventh street, near Broadway, should have read $85,000, instead of $6,000, as printed. For next week the auctions proposed are not only numerous, but of superior importance, and an extensive line of City real estate will be offered at various auctions. The number of legal sales noticed for consummation is unusually large, and investors will find it to their interest to consult our full list of proposed sales for the week, as published in this column on Monday morning. Attention is also called to the business notices of the Exchange, containing valuable information as to real estate offered at private sale, and also to the advertised lists of houses and business property to let.

"A BOLD, BRAVE BOOK!"
READY TODAY.
THE ABOMINATIONS OF MODERN SOCIETY.
By Rev. T. De WITT TALMAGE.

Of this book, about which so much expectancy has been excited, nothing need be said. How such a man as T. De Witt Talmage will treat such subjects as he here introduces can be well understood. Earnest to do good, determined to do his duty, he here shows himself not only as the fearless expositor, but as the wise counselor and benefacent friend. That it will do good—immense good—and have an unexampled circulation, are certain.

Prospects of the Committee of Seventy's Charter.

A Row at the Railroad Monopolies—Passage of Amended Board of Audit Bill—Legislation of Public Processions.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 9, 1872.

The postponement of the consideration of the Seventy's charter by the Assembly until Tuesday next will afford an opportunity, whether so intended or not, for a combination of the various elements of opposition to it, and will increase the obstacles in the way of its speedy passage. Had a vote been taken on it yesterday, it would have passed, substantially as it came from the hands of the Committee of Seventy, by a good majority. Now, its chances are not so promising. It is evident that the charter is not satisfactory to either of the political parties or factions of parties in New-York, and that fact ought to be regarded by honest men as its highest recommendation. It will destroy the arbitrary power of political caucuses and conventions, and enable the people to elect a good ticket, at least, of honest and capable men to represent them in the various departments of the City Government. This does not suit the politicians of the Democratic or Republican parties, and hence we find among the opponents of the charter on one side all the remnants of the Tammany Democracy as represented in the Legislature by TOM FIELDS, together with the reorganized Democracy, as represented by its prospective leader, SAMUEL J. TILDEN; and on the other side, the active politicians of both branches of the Republican Party, as represented by men like CHARLES S. SPENCER. All those elements of opposition have discovered the disadvantage under which they labor in not having submitted to the consideration of the Legislature any definite plan of a charter to take the place of that offered by the Committee of Seventy, and I understand that the time between now and Tuesday is to be devoted to the preparation of a charter that shall meet the views of both wings of the Republican Party in New-York, in order that they may come here next week and present a united front in opposition to the work of the Committee of Seventy, and in favor of their own. It is also expected that by that time Mr. TILDEN will have perfected his scheme for a model Municipal Government, which it is hoped, will meet the views of the united, regenerated and harmonious Democracy. Meantime great efforts are being made to impress upon the minds of members the notion that the leading feature of the Seventy's charter—the cumulative voting principle—is unconstitutional, and will be so declared by the Court of Appeals. Past expressions of opinion by Judge POMEROY, while he was a member of the last Constitutional Convention, as well as of Ex-Judges PRATT and CORNISH, are freely quoted to show that the principle will not stand the test of constitutional law. To counteract this plea the friends of the charter will, it is said, present, on Tuesday next, written opinions from some of the most eminent lawyers in the State, indorsing to the fullest extent the constitutionality of the plan of proportionate representation embodied in the charter. The framers of the charter admit that this is the leading idea of the whole instrument, and that if it is rejected they care not what becomes of the charter. They also inform members that on the adoption or rejection of the charter by the Legislature will depend the dissolution or perpetuation of the Committee of Seventy. With the passage of their charter their intention was to disband the Committee, feeling that the rights of the people would be amply secured in future under it; but, if it is rejected, they propose to keep up their organization, and to create as much havoc among the politicians of both parties in future elections as they did last November. The honest people of New-York, independent of party, have discovered what power they can wield in Municipal elections, when united, and, whether their charter is adopted or not, they do not propose to surrender this power back into the hands of politicians.

THIRD READING OF BILLS.

The Assembly did a large amount of work today in the third reading of bills, having passed a score or more, besides introducing thirty new ones. Among the bills passed was the appropriation of half a million of dollars for Brooklyn sewers. The bill noticed yesterday for the creation of a commission to have charge of all matters relating to New-York Harbor and the approaches thereto, including quarantine, emigration, port officials, pilots, and the construction of wharves and piers was introduced today by Mr. TWOMBLY. The Commissioners are to be ten in number instead of nine, as the bill was first drawn, and are to represent the entire State, as well as both political parties. This is one of the most important bills that have been brought here this season, and, if it passes, will relieve the Legislature from the consideration of half a dozen separate measures of legislation relative to the Port of New-York, all of which are embraced in it.

A BLOW AT THE RAILROAD MONOPOLIES.

Mr. MACKAY introduced the following preamble and resolutions, which were ordered printed and laid on the table for future action. They are indicative of the strong anti-railroad monopoly sentiment that prevails among a large portion of the people of this State, and which, it is said, will ere long find expression in political action. They are to be followed by a bill framed in accordance with the legal opinion that shall be called forth from the Attorney-General:

Whereas, Civilization is based on intercourse among the people, and

Whereas, It is one of the first and most important duties of Government to provide means to establish laws regulating such intercourse, and

Whereas, The welfare of every community depends on the cheapness, convenience and dispatch by which the facilities necessary for such intercourse are regulated, and

Whereas, Railroads have superseded ordinary highways, turnpikes, plank-roads, lakes, rivers and canals, and have grown to be the recognized modes by which persons and property are transported from one section of the country to another; and

Whereas, Railroads have been declared for public uses, and have been invested with the rights to take what private property is necessary for their construction, with or without the consent of its owner; and

Whereas, The original charters by which railroad companies were created in this State, and under which railroads were permitted to be built, restricted the amount of the capital stock and bonded indebtedness of such companies to an amount equal to the actual and in good faith expended either in the construction or equipment of the roads which said corporations represent; and

Whereas, Most original charters also restricted the amount of interest or dividends which said companies might pay to ten per cent. per annum on the amount so actually expended, thereby proving that the Legislature of the period did not intend railroads to be built in interest by capitalists or enterprise prevented from being taxed for the use of such roads beyond an amount sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of construction, and a fair and reasonable return on the money actually expended on them for the public welfare; and

Whereas, The people of this State paid during the last year to the different railroad companies doing business in the State, nearly seventy millions dollars for having their persons and property transported over the roads represented by said companies; and

Whereas, Nearly five million dollars of this sum was appropriated by the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company to pay interest or dividends on the bonds, stock or scrip of said company, which bonds, stock or scrip represented an excess over all sums ever invested or paid into the Treasury of said company by the stock and bondholders of said company; and

Whereas, The said corporations have become oppressive to the people of this State, and to be relieved from which they have repeatedly, and in great numbers, petitioned their representatives; and

Whereas, The results of watering stock, issuing bonds, and facing mortgages and, first to pay interest or dividends on such water, has been to drive wealthy capitalists from this State; to destroy building and manufacturing interests; to increase the amount of agricultural products; and to cause the commercial supremacy of the Metropolis of this State, and generally to make railroads a source of oppression rather than a blessing to the people; therefore,

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of this State be requested to inform the body with his legal opinion, whether or not the provisions of the act passed for the Construction of the United States and the Constitution of this State, and forming the right to eminent domain, or to take private property for public uses, or the Act passed in the year 1850, relative to the use of the Hudson River Railroad, by the Legislature, constitutes a fair and just contract on the part of the State, and whether or not the Legislature did not, in fact, by such acts, make a fair and just contract on both original sides.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be also requested to furnish his opinion, whether or not any act of the Legislature which he shall pronounce constitutional and fair, which shall compel the railroad companies to pay public taxes, to increase their capital stock, or distribute their earnings among the people, would be in the direction of a fair and just contract on the public side? Or, whether or not, such an act, based on the equitable consideration of such railroads, or whom, such increase represents an unearned value of private property appropriated by such company for a public use.

[Was passed unanimously.—EDITOR.]

The bill authorizing the Seventh Regiment, National Guard, to lease Empire-park for the erection of a new armory is encountering strong opposition from the residents around the neighborhood and others. They say that the square last just been put in a condition to serve as a pleasant and healthful place of resort for the residents in that neighborhood; that a large amount of money has been expended by the City with that view, and that it would be an outrage to uproot the flowers and shrubbery now to furnish a building site for an armory—especially as the regiment that asks the privilege is already supplied with the best armory in the City. The bill was reported favorably by the Senate Military Committee, but in consequence of numerous protests against it from property-owners, Senator PARKER moved to recommit it to the Committee on Cities, before whom the opponents of the measure will be granted a hearing on Thursday next.

SEKAR'S CONTESTED SEAT.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported the testimony taken by them in the contested seat case of KILLEAN vs. ALEX. SEKAR, which was ordered printed. The report of the Committee will be made as soon as counsel can be heard for the contestants on the facts as proven in the testimony.

THE NEW-YORK BOARD OF AUDIT BILL.

The bill to amend the act of January last creating the City Board of Audit was reconsidered in the Senate today and certain amendments moved into it. These were offered by Mr. RAYMOR, the efficient Chairman of the Committee of Cities, who asked unanimous consent for that purpose. The uneasiness which is felt by members of the present Senate when these large City measures come before them again displayed itself. Mr. WOOD, of the Onondaga District, objected to interpolating these important amendments in bills of so much consequence in so irregular a manner. He thought the bill should be printed with the amendments in it, so that Senators could know exactly what they were voting upon. This would have carried the bill over to next week. Mr. PARKER explained that the amendments he desired to introduce, the most important of which fixed the expenditure authorized at $7,500,000, were simply those which were necessary to supply the deficits pointed out by the Governor in his message accompanying the original bill; and that the reason they had not been incorporated in the supplementary bill at first was that a defective copy had inadvertently been sent up by the counsel of the Board of Audit in the first instance, and that the error had only been discovered yesterday. His explanations were so clear and satisfactory that the Senate passed the bill, two or three Republican members who objected to voting for it on the ground of haste and imperfect understanding of it, being induced to waive their objections by the personal efforts of Senator FOLGER, who has served himself peculiarly to procure the passage of these New-York City relief measures, and without whose aid this bill could not have passed today. The following is a copy of the bill as it was amended and passed this morning, and as it afterward passed the Assembly:

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An Act relating to appropriations and deficiencies in the City and County of New-York, and the audit and payment of salaries and claims in said City and County," passed Feb. 13, 1871.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows: SECTION 1. The estimate authorized by the first section of the said act entitled "An Act relating to appropriations and deficiencies in the City and County of New-York and the audit and payment of salaries and claims in said City and County, passed Jan. 31, 1871, may be made as one year's estimate, and the bonds and revenue bonds therein mentioned may provide, but such estimates in the aggregate shall not exceed the sum of seven and a half millions of dollars; and the Controller is hereby authorized to issue from time to time on the credit of the said City and County, in anticipation of the revenues thereof, an amount not exceeding said estimates to meet the expenditures by said act provided, and such revenue bonds shall be issued and nothing in this or in said section contained shall affect the power of any Department of the said City or other body to proceed with and execute works of a permanent character which it is authorized by laws now in force to proceed with and execute, nor to prevent the said Controller from raising the moneys required for the payment of such permanent works under said act.

SEC. 2. It is hereby provided and declared that the second section of said act shall not apply to any claim for which a sufficient appropriation remained unexpended at the date of the passage of said act; and further, that the said Board may audit and allow and the said Controller may pay the claims specified in the said second section, notwithstanding they may be in excess of any sum or sums appropriated to any one department or of the Departments, or for any of the purposes of the said City or County, under and pursuant to chapter 583 of the laws of 1871. All bills, accounts and claims presented to said Board shall be presented to the Comptroller of Finance in said City, and shall be open to the inspection of the public, and except those for salaries and wages shall not be audited by said Board until they have been on file five days after presentation. A general statement and entry of the nature of any bill, claim or account at the time of its presentation shall be deemed and taken as a reading and entry thereof in a book to be kept for that purpose. This act shall not affect the act herein amended. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require the said Controller to pay out of the proceeds of bonds authorized to be issued under this section any claims or demands that may lawfully be paid out of the avails of bonds or stocks heretofore by any law authorized, or out of the avails of taxation, or from any special or trust fund, provided said construction shall not prevent or delay the payment of the several banks, insurance and trust companies to the moneys advanced by them or either of them.

SEC. 3. The third section of the said act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately.

PROCESSIONS IN CITIES.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill in the Senate to regulate public processions. It is general in its provisions and applies to all the cities of the State.

The bill declares that all citizens have an equal right of way on and across the public streets, subject to the lawful control of the City authorities, under the provisions of the law. All processions, except of the National Guard, the Police and the Fire Departments, are forbidden, unless the time, the object, time and route be given beforehand to the Police authorities, and their written consent obtained, when suitable protection shall be furnished. All processions, except funeral processions, are prohibited on Sunday; and in no case shall cannon, fire-arms or fire-works, or there be fire-works, music or other disturbing noises. The violation of the act is made a misdemeanor.

THE CHARGES AGAINST NEW-YORK JUDGES.

In the Judiciary Committee today, on motion of Mr. TILDEN, it was resolved that the whole Committee proceed to New-York and commence an investigation of the charges against certain Judges in that City on Friday next, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Both Houses of the Legislature have adjourned over again until Monday evening. In the Assembly this was done without even the show of opposition, except that twenty-three out of seventy-three votes were in the negative. In the Senate Mr. D. P. WOOD objected, and said that business was beginning to accumulate, so that Saturday sessions were imperatively necessary. The motion to adjourn was carried, however—19 to 7.

A resolution has been offered, and now lies on the table in the Assembly, to take the customary adjournment from Feb. 16 to the 26th.

APPOINTMENTS CONFIRMED.

The Senate today confirmed the following appointments: For Manager of the Western House of Refuge for Juvenile Delinquents, George L. Whitney, reappointed, of Rochester; Lewis Chapin, reappointed, of Rochester; Lewis Strait, reappointed, of Rochester; John O'Donohue, reappointed, of Rochester; Charles H. Monell, new appointment, of Batavia; Martin B. Anderson, of Rochester, in place of Wm. A. Reynolds, deceased. S.

Benevolent Brooklyn Druggists.

JOHN B. and THOS. L. THOMPSON, druggists, doing business at the corner of Myrtle and Bedford avenues, recently filed a petition to be adjudged bankrupts. Since then some attention has been directed to the fact that at the period of the Chicago fire they placed in front of their place a large placard calling for subscriptions for the sufferers, and offering to forward contributions free. It has been said that none of these offerings were ever forwarded. To ascertain the truth letters of inquiry were addressed to Chicago from the Mayor's office, and it seems that the benevolent druggists are entirely unknown to the relief committees, except as the destitute utters of a box of drugs and one of clothing.

The Pat Upshaw's Banquet—Election of Officers.

The alumni of Pat Upshaw had their annual banquet at Delmonico's last evening. The banquet was preceded by a business meeting, at which the following officers were elected: JOHN TAYLOR JOHNSTON, President; William Taylor, Wm. E. Robinson, Geo. H. Moore, John G. Saxe and others, Vice-Presidents; Robert L. Belknap, Treasurer; R. W. De Forest, Recording Secretary; Rufus King, Corresponding Secretary; Wm. P. Morgan, Robert Sutter, Henry Benson, Julien T. Davies and George F. Smith, Stewards.

Among those present were Judge Hooper, C. Van Vort, Rev. John Cotton Smith, John Taylor Johnston, Collector Chester A. Arthur, Waldo Hutchins, Dr. Wm. R. Draper, R. F. Duplaing, and Maturen L. Delafield. The regular toasts were given and responded to, either which a member of the songs of the Kentucky, were sung with the chorus, which most of the old gentlemen present knew and a fair and just return on both original sides.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be also requested to furnish his opinion, whether or not any act of the Legislature which he shall pronounce constitutional and fair, compel the railroad companies to pay public taxes, to increase their capital stock, or distribute their earnings among the people, would be in the direction of a fair and just contract on the public side? Or, whether or not, such an act, based on the equitable consideration of such railroads, or whom, such increase represents an unearned value of private property appropriated by such company for a public use.

OUR SAVINGS BANKS.

The Financial Exhibits of Local Banks for 1871 Concluded.

The List Finished—The Irving, Abingdon and Security Banks—The Greenwich Bank Refuses to Make a Statement.

The statements of the financial condition of our City savings banks is concluded this morning. The annual report of nearly every solvent savings institution in New-York has been given in these columns. These banks whose statements have not appeared in the TIMES are, with one exception, those whose annual statements were either not completed or whose rules would not allow a statement to be published until after a meeting of the Board of Trustees. The public has thus been enabled by these seven statements, which are fac similes of those sent to the Bank Superintendent at Albany, to observe the manner in which each of the banks does its business in the way of investing its deposits. The comparison which each surplus has undergone with the surplus sworn to in 1870, will doubtless prove useful to depositors in determining the amount of confidence which the various banks deserve.

A considerable number of these banks in their present reports for the first time include among their liabilities the interest due to depositors for the half year ending on Jan. 16. There had been a serious cause of complaint against many of the banks, which had included in their assets the interest due to them on bond and mortgage and not paid in, but had failed to debit themselves with the amount of the interest on deposits which they were bound to pay within a few days after they issued their statements.

These sums of interest oftentimes rolled up to large amounts, and upon subtracting this legitimate liability from the assets, many a bank which swore to a surplus was proved to have a deficit of several thousands of dollars. The Bank Superintendent has now made it incumbent on every bank to include the interest due depositors among its liabilities, so that henceforth all cause of complaint on that head is removed.

The many insolvent savings banks of this City have, of course, presented no regular statement this year, with the exception of the Market Bank. By reference to the sworn statements of all these insolvent institutions for the year 1870, it is observed that a very large proportion of the assets of each is put under the head of call loans, that is, money loaned chiefly to individuals, on securities of various kinds, but generally supposed to be on United States stocks. In the statement for 1870 of the Market Bank, one-third of the entire assets of the bank is put under the head of "call loans." The development of the transactions of that institution have brought forth, proves that nearly all the deficit can be traced to these call loans. The same remark applies to the Bowling-green and the other insolvent institutions. Several of the oldest and most trustworthy savings banks in New-York decline to loan money on call loans unless the security offered is ample, or the borrower the security may be. In view of recent developments, it cannot but be admitted that this is a wise precaution which many other savings banks would do well to imitate.

IRVING SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

This bank is situated at No. 96 Warren-street, and its principal officers are Mr. WALTER C. CORCKLIN, President, and Mr. VANDERBILT L. BURTON, Secretary. The statement given below shows the assets to be $6,186,013 12, and the surplus to be $200,060 54. In the statement for the year 1870, the assets are given as $2,764,744 93 and the surplus $215,723 61. This year's report thus shows increased assets, but a decrease of surplus to the amount of $12,662 97.

ABINGDON SAVINGS BANK.

This Savings Bank, situated in Abingdon-square, was only recently incorporated. Its principal officers are Mr. T. McCLELLAND, President, and Mr. GEO. H. BROWN, Secretary. In less than two years this bank shows the following report of business, resources and liabilities. The surplus as compared with that of the year 1870 shows an increase of $4,225 26. The Trustees of the Bank inform the public that in addition to the present surplus they have deposited a separate fund of $7,500 as security to general depositors:

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK.

This bank is at the corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Third-avenue. Its principal officers are Mr. D. D. T. MARSHALL, President, and Mr. JOHN A. BRYAN, Secretary. The statement given below is certainly a very full one. The call loans of the bank upon securities of various kinds amount in all to $99,781 68. Among the minor items of assets are to be observed the safe and fixtures, and the "cash on hand and in postage stamps." In addition to which is the singularly uncommon item of books and stationery, which probably include sealing-wax and mucilage also, and is put down at the sum of $600. The surplus of the bank is $2,500, which shows a decrease from that of the year 1870 of $5,421 03.

THE GREENWICH SAVINGS BANK.

Application was made to the Treasurer of this bank for his annual statement. He at first seemed disinclined to give the TIMES representative any information respecting its financial condition. When told what the object of the TIMES was in the publication of these statements, the Treasurer said for his part he would like to see a run upon the Greenwich Bank, the amount of cash on hand being quite oppressive. The Greenwich Bank Treasurer was congratulated upon this enviable state of affairs, and application for a statement was received. This was answered by a complaint upon the course taken by certain morning journals on the savings bank question. The Treasurer finally stated that a meeting of the Board of Trustees was expected to take place at some distant day, and he would then submit the application of the TIMES to the assembled body. No statement of the bank has yet been received, so it is presumed that the Board of Trustees have not yet assembled. The statement of this bank for the year 1870 showed their assets to be $7,844,966 10, and their surplus $441,766 41. It is hoped that when their next statement, does appear, the condition of the bank will be equally satisfactory.

The Gas Monopolies—Petition from the West Side Consumers.

A large meeting of gas consumers, principally those resident on the west side of the city, was held last evening at Redelff's Hall, No. 455 Eighth-avenue, to take measures and discuss the dues of a petition to be presented to the Legislature, supporting the numerous gas companies. Mr. G. W. ORTON presided. The Chairman read a petition to the Legislature

The delegates of the Irish Societies met last evening at No. 45 Prince-street, for the purpose of making preparations for the parade on St. Patrick's Day. The Convention was organized and they adjourned till Friday evening next.

At the New-York Liberal Club last evening, Prof. MARIMON MARIA, from the Theatre Imperial Court Theatre, read selections from SHAKESPEARE, SCHILLER and other poets. There was a large audience, and the readings elicited loud and repeated applause.

C. F. BUSCH, the admirer of Mlle. NILSSON, escaped from the Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island five or six days ago. Yesterday Officer WALSH, of the Department of Charities, found him in New-York, in North William-street, and had him conveyed to the Asylum.

PEDRO FRANCISCO and FERNANDO ENTONIO were arraigned yesterday by Capt. CAMPBELL and taken before Commissioner BURLING, on a charge of selling and offering for sale a large quantity of cigars which had not been stamped according to law. They were held in $600 bail each for examination.

Collector ARTHUR is investigating the case of Inspectors COOKE and FRINDLE, who, it is alleged, while in charge of the steamer Idaho, permitted irregularities in discharging the cargo. The two inspectors have been suspended, and, if the charges are proved, will be removed.

Yesterday afternoon a fire broke out in the roof of the three-story brick building, No. 144 Goerck-street, and was communicated to the roofs of the houses No. 492 to 496 East Houston-street, doing a damage of $2,000 to the buildings, and $1,200 to the occupants. The disaster was caused by sparks from a chimney.

At a meeting of the Tax-payers' Association of the Seventeenth, Tenth and Eleventh Wards, of this City, on Thursday evening last, resolutions indorsing and commending the conduct of Controller CHARLES A. LAWRENCE in the administration of the affairs of his office since his accession to the same, were adopted.

JOSEPH HYLAND, formerly night baggage-master of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, was committed by Justice BIXBY yesterday, on a charge of breaking into the ticket-office of the Railroad Company a year ago and stealing therefrom $1,000 in money. Besides money was then stolen.

Upon complaints made by Capt. DUNCAN, Justice DOWLING yesterday committed ALEX. KELLY, No. 29½ Cherry-street; PATRICK FARRELL, No. 59 Oak-street; JOHN DORAN, No. 61 Oliver-street; JOHN MONAHAN, No. 110½ Cherry-street; and JOHN S. COLLINS, No. 115 Hamilton-street, on charges of keeping sailor boarding-houses without licenses.

The Junior exhibition of the Class of '72 of the College of the City of New-York took place last evening at Steinway Hall. The exercises consisted of orations delivered by Messrs. Charles F. Pagnani, L. E. Jones, Benno Lewinson, Abraham Salomon, W. Sylvester Church, Charles W. Fisher

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

The Death of the Emperor—Personal Characteristics of the Ex-Sovereign of Bonapartedom—M. Thiers and the Legislature—The Financial Position.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Wednesday, Jan. 11, 1871.

Are the hour I begin to write my letter you have received the particulars of the death of the Duke DE PERSIGNY, and have given him the usual biographical notice. Yet M. DE PERSIGNY was a man well worth a second reflection, and one whose life and character may be profitably considered and reconsidered. He was, to use the common phrase, the architect of his own fortune. Very little is known of his youth, for, like NAPOLEON III., he came into public notice only at the maturity of his manhood. Yet it is known that he was poor, that he entered the army as a private, and made his way up to the grade of Sergeant of the Fourth Hussars. His grade was equal to a first Sergeant of Company A, in our service, and he was next in the line of promotion. He left the army upon the reformation of his regiment in 1829, and came to Paris to make his fortune. Like many other public men he became a journalist, and was one of the writers for the Temps. In 1836 he began a monthly review, which lived but a month, but which proved the corner-stone of M. DE PERSIGNY'S success. An article in that number attracted the attention of the Prince LOUIS NAPOLEON, who wrote a very friendly letter to the author, and from this moment the two men became friends. In writing the biography of the late Duke, one must begin with these few notes and then go on with the history of Strasbourg, Boulogne, the exchange and the Empire. The Duke was the warm friend and counselor of the Prince, or I should rather say, M. DE PERSIGNY, for the title of Duke came in after years with success. He was by the Prince's side up to the day the latter left the Elysée for the Tuileries. Soon after a friend spoke to M. DE PERSIGNY about the apparent coolness of the Emperor since this change. "Put yourself in his place," was the reply. "Then he had need of his friends; now his friends have need of him." M. DE PERSIGNY rose rapidly to become a Duke of the Second Empire, Senator, Privy Counselor and Minister, but through his own good sense and clear head rather than by the courtier's art; indeed, he was very bold and outspoken, and frequently found himself in disgrace with the Empire. On those occasions he retired to the country to await the hour of his recall, which always came in the hour of trial or trouble. It is certain that he favored all of the reforms proposed under the Empire, and that he tried to lead the Government on to new and more important ones. His residence in England, where Mme. DE PERSIGNY was always a great favorite in society, made the Duke look upon that Government as a model, and he tried by every means in his power to give France the liberties and privileges enjoyed on the other side of the Channel. Mme. DE PERSIGNY always spoke French with a decided English accent.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Perhaps there are fewer personal characteristics to be pointed of M. DE PERSIGNY than any other public man in France. He was very simple in his manners, dress and habits, and excessively frugal in his tastes. Before receiving the title of Count he always signed himself "F. (FIALIN) DE PERSIGNY." After being made a Duke he signed shortly, "PERSIGNY." He was always dressed in black, yet there was the air of the dandy about him, because he had the true secret of dress. Take care of the extremities, and the rest of the body will take care of itself. The Duke was very particular about his boots and the fit of his kid gloves. The best glove-makers in France were called upon to measure his hands, and he was never seen in the streets without most exquisitely-fitting kids. Two or three pairs were always seen lying upon his desk. His tailor had very little difficulty in satisfying him, but his boot and glove makers had to look sharp at their work. His face was pensive and thoughtful, and men called him cold and distant, partly because he never drank or played with them to any extent, partly on account of his unvarying courtesy and politeness. If you have a friend with the bottom petsent of a Duke you like him to unbend a little; if you cannot fulsyer him at the club or before the public, you do like to take his arm or buttonhole him for a chat. Very few cared to take such liberties with M. DE PERSIGNY. Yet he was very true from being a cold or distant man or an indifferent friend. In the agreeable salons of Mme. La Duchesse he was charming; he was a hero to his own valet; his servants adored him; and he always paid an act of friendship ten times over. I often wonder that Gen. GRANT does not reply to his tradnesse like Monsieur le Duc DE PERSIGNY. He was reproached for giving some place to a relative. "And why should I not do that for him, and more if I can?" said the Duke; "he paid for my epaulettes when I had not a sou." By this he meant that his relative had given him a military outfit. Does a public expect a man to lose all feeling of gratitude to those who were true to him in other days because he gives his services to the country? If such were the case, M. DE PERSIGNY begged to retire, for he would accept no office which forced him to become an ingrat, an office which forbade him to aid his friends. When brought face to face with such arguments one can imagine the attempts at apology.

CURRENT ANECDOTES.

There are quite a number of pleasant stories recorded of the Duke, but the most agreeable to me are those which account most the journalists of Paris. He never wore decorations, that vanity of the French, and yet he had a hue full. He was always kind to his subordinates. No men were better paid or better cared for than those of M. DE PERSIGNY'S department. He used to say: "A cheap government is that in which conscience cost little and are worth very little. It is because by that fact the government the most dear to the people." If one of his subordinates was unwell the Duke was the first to offer to take his work upon his own shoulders, but of course, after an offer of that kind there were plenty of volunteers to relieve his Grace. With these things in mind, it is not difficult to understand why everything went like clockwork in his department, or why the Emperor sent for him again when affairs began to get in disorder. Of late M. DE PERSIGNY has been in pecuniary difficulties. He bought Chamadrade, and was never able to clear off the mortgage, and barely succeeded in paying the accumulating interest. At the moment he was accused of having made a large fortune out of the people of France, he was living with the greatest economy in order to pay his debts, and keep a home that he loved. I do not know what name the doctor gave to the malady which carried off the Duke, but it is safe to say that he died of the 4th of September, and with chagrin at finding the people, for whom he had honestly toiled, follow his traducers who then succeeded to power. Not only were all of his acts calumniated, but false motives were attributed to him. That this should come from the people was very hard; but he was always gay when told of his disgrace with the Emperor. "Confess" he said to a friend on one of these occasions, "that politics is the most imbecile profession an intelligent man can follow. You see that I have been turned out of doors but a moment after all I have said for three years has been verified by accomplished facts." At Charmarande, waiting for his recall to Paris, the Duke consoled himself with his farm, and within doors with history, literature and the arts. M. DE PERSIGNY was never tired of warning the Emperor against JULES FAVRE, BERETTER and THIERS, and on the ground that if he gave them an inch they would, without gratitude or honesty, take an ell.

GROWTH OF REPUBLICANISM.

For some weeks past we have had little talk about anything but bad weather, Budgets, taxes on prime articles, and the Emperor of Brazil. In private, however, the Deputies do not disguise their alarm at the growing republican sentiment in the country. I am sorry to say, however, that that sentiment is of the deep a tint to promise much for the future, and that it is almost as bitter to the present Government as it is to the Monarchists. GAMBETTA goes to Marseilles, and without interference from the authorities assembles the people to hear a Republican sincerely convinced of the necessity of things, and such sentiment meets with similar, if not, in his city, more enthusiastic response. Gen. CATHERINEAU, named a vice M. Mazzini, publishes, and indeed he has said a great deal, and returned by the Left. He attempt was made to arrest the guilty parties, and the Prefect kept out of sight. It is true, by order of superior authority. To protest GAMBETTA, and not to protect CATHERINEAU, is about the extreme way in the world of crushing the hopes of the Left. A little firmness speedily puts them down—a moment's weakness gives them an in finitude. In all of the interior cities there have been great meeting of the order, just enough to show that the Imperialists cause is not dead, and to make the Germans close up their ranks and look sharp at their outposts. It is said that Count ARNIM has asked M. THIERS if he was aware of a fact reported to Prince BISMARCK, that M. GAMBETTA had gone to the Midi to visit his organized bands, and that he had given as a rallying cry: "No more war indemnity, down les Barbares!" At any rate, there was to have been an interpellation in the Chamber on this subject, but M. THIERS managed to put the matter off. It is easy to perceive that this kind of republicanism can do the country no good. GAMBETTA is simply marshaling his forces and getting things in order for the day when M. THIERS shall "pass over to the majority."

M. THIERS IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Reading of the part taken by the President in the daily discussions in the Chamber, many may ask what has become of the clause in the third proposition which says that the President can only join in the debate on serious occasions, and after sending a formal notice of his intention to the presiding officer. The provision is there, but M. THIERS does not not care a button for it. Every day he enters like an ordinary Deputy, and takes his seat upon the Ministerial benches. If the Budget is in question he is soon in hot dispute, and other crying out something from his seat, or springing into the tribune to reply to the last speaker. There the members cry "Oh! Oh!" call out to him, question him, laugh, hoot and ridicule him as if he had no higher dignity than that of Deputy. The explanation of the President's persistence is, that he is unable to trust a single one of his Ministers to reply in favor of the Budget. M. THIERS has determined to have his own way about taxes, and, as for that matter, about everything else; but he finds nearly all his Ministers and half of the Assembly opposed to him, and he is obliged to fight hard to carry his plans through. M. ROUVER QUEYRIER, who is with him always loses his temper and says something he ought not to say. The rest have to argue against their own convictions. None of them have the tact necessary for the occasion. Hence M. THIERS feels bound, law or no law, to enter the Assembly and defend his financial policy. He does it admirably, point by point. He scored a round number on Saturday by saying that his whole mind was given to the one object of maintaining the "Peace of Bordeaux," and of keeping an equilibrium between the parties. Those words pleased the Chamber immensely. It put all but a small faction of Republicans grand-mâle in extremely good humor, and there was a large vote in the President's favor.

WASTE OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Speaking of the Budget reminds me that, after all the taxes and imposts and increased revenues, the Government demands an additional 147 millions. This is to help to meet two items in the Budget—the sinking fund, 200 millions; increased expenses of the army, 76 millions. The first thought will be that these "increased" army expenses might be dispensed with, and that it is too soon to begin thinkies of paying off the debt. In reality, both of these items belong to the army. The 200 millions is not for a sinking fund, but to pay the Bank of France. Two hundred millions for, say, four years, leaves 800 millions in hand, or at hand in case of a sudden declaration of war. M. THIERS cannot, as Prince BISMARCK did, claim a large war fund constantly at the disposal of the Government, but in this way he can always have a large sum at command. Now, there is no secret about this matter, and if the Assembly votes it we must believe that it was a well-understood thing, and for the purpose of preparing for sudden war.

ASHBY.

CAPT. SUTTER.

His Petition to the California Legislature for a Pension.

During a recent debate in the California House of Representatives upon a resolution to pay Capt. J. A. SUTTER a pension of $250 per month, (which was subsequently passed,) the following pitiful letter from the poor and infirm pioneer was read:

LITTLE LANCASTER COUNTY, PENN., Dec. 12, 1871.

To Hon. Thos. B. Stanton, Speaker of the Assembly of California:

DEAR SIR: By assisting me I shall be forever grateful for this great favor, as I am now sixty years old, and my wife sixty-six years; I will have to live only a few years longer, as I am subject to inflammatory rheumatism, and have to suffer very severely every year. I am confined to my bed for months, and have to employ a nurse to attend to my wants, and as I begin to feel the hardship of my pioneer life. Everybody who knows my history knows that I have no other resources to depend on, having been swindled and robbed in every way and shape. I am sure a great many gentlemen of the Legislature are aware that I have a claim for the amount of about $24,000 State taxes on my twenty-two leagues grant before it was rejected; the said grant from the Government of Mexico having been confirmed by the United States Land Commissioner, and again confirmed and decided in my favor by the District Court of the District of California, and when it was brought before the Supreme Court in Washington under the Administration of poor BUCHANAN, it was rejected in the most unjust manner. It was the unknown of money which delayed me. And now I have been and was struggling six Winters in Washington in the same New Congress it was, and now next January it will be the seventh time, and when I shall not succeed to get something done, I shall abandon my claim entirely. The prospect is very poor for one who has not a pocket full of money in Washington; and with this justice can be bought. At the time when the United States Supreme Court rejected my claim, it decided that such taxes paid have to be refunded by the State; but I hesitated to claim the money by a lawyer or by one of my honest (!) agents, because I did know by experience that I would be swindled and robbed of them not of all, nearly of the whole amount. I was then talking about this matter with my friends, Senators BUCKLEY and CUNNINGHAM, and other gentlemen of the Senate and Assembly of California, and they, in conjunction with their friends, very generously set themselves to work and succeeded in granting a pension for me of $250 per month for five years. After the expiration of this time it was neglected for one year, and then, with some difficulty, it passed both Houses with the sanction of the Governor for the term of two years longer, which will expire with the next month of March. I see the gentlemen of the Legislature have not have forgotten what services I have rendered to the State in early times, and what I done for the suffering emigrants whom I have saved from starvation, and kept and sustained during and through whole Winters, the sick being carried in on litters, and employment; and in many other good and charitable works. About the gold discovery, it is not worth while to say more about it than that it occurred through the instrumentality of my having secured and furnished the means to build the saw-mill. MARSHALL is very jealous about having the credit that he found the first gold in the millrace. But I beg your pardon. I have troubled you with such a long letter, for which you will kindly excuse me. I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, your most obedient servant.

J. A. SUTTER, Pioneer of California.

Changes in New-Orleans.

In the announcement of his retirement from the New-Orleans Picayune, published on the 1st inst., Mr. A. M. HOLBROOK says:

"This journal has been under my direction as editor and manager nearly since its foundation, in 1837, now more than thirty-five years. I have labored to deserve, and have certainly had the favor, the countenance and the patronage of many of the best of our people of all professions. I have seen many vicissitudes and changes, and the public of today numbers but few of those who began public life with me here more than the third of a century ago. Many minor and Brief that further have passed from the known appearance except as remembered by descendants, or in the grateful memory of those who still hover them. Our city is wholly changed, and a new people, new thoughts, and new enterprises have taken the place of the old."

THE ROMAN QUESTION.

The Pope Refuses to Recognize the Italian Government—The Bishops Protest Against the Spoliation of the Church—Bishop Ketteler and the Revolutionary Party.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Jan. 14, 1871.

The Pope has answered the last letter addressed to him by the Italian Government. In a country where the government of Ministers is not dependent upon parliamentary majority, and where some functionaries act more at the wish and caprice of a Prince than as the agents of public opinion, the change of a portfolio might appear hardly worthy of notice. Exceptional importance attaches to the present instance, because M. VON MUHLER has represented a special principle in the Cabinet—a principle which the Constitution supplied him with means of enforcing, but which has long been at variance with the general views both of the public and of his own colleagues, especially of Prince BISMARCK himself. M. VON MUHLER in office had been felt as a sore and burden to the country for years, and agitation against a Minister could not be either more active or more justified than it has been against him, as the head of the ecclesiastical and educational Department. Several times has the unpopular Minister seemed to totter in his seat, but he has invariably recovered his equilibrium, and even this last time, when the shock came from above instead of from below, the favor which he commands with his imperial master has again all but upheld him. But it might not be. Hitherto BISMARCK has not deigned to meddle in educational and religious matters; now they have grown to such urgent importance that he must take their reorganization personally in hand; consequently MUHLER, like a dry branch, must fall off to make room for younger and more pliable shoots.

HISTORY OF THE CULTUS MINISTERIUM.

The history of the Educational Ministry (Cultus Ministerium) is no chapter in the Prussian history that patriots feel particular pride in, however instructive the past may be made for the future. One great task it has indeed accomplished. It has enforced compulsory education, and set the machinery in motion by which that main source of Prussian culture and Prussian power is kept from running dry. But beyond this great triumph its bureaucratic and narrow-minded tendencies have served to defeat its own victory by taming and charming down the arm to which it had first given force. The department was founded in 1817 under the enlightened Minister BEYME ALTENSTEIN, who presided over it till his death, for twenty-three years, and employed the power thus given him for the good of his country. Ever since—excepting the few weeks of revolutionary administration under ROONSTRUM TAGETZOW, in 1848—the tendency has been one of narrow bigotry and bureaucratic despotism.

THE LATE INCUMBENT.

M. VON MUHLER was appointed to the office which he has graced for nearly ten years in March, 1862, and he above all has kept up in their fullest vigor the pernicious traditions of his predecessors. The time of his elevation coincided with the historical "conflict" between the Crown and Parliament, and he was called in fact, as one of the most conspicuous tools to be employed in the thankless task of mastering the opposition. MUHLER was born in 1812, at Brieg, in Silesia. His intellectual talents raised him into prominence at school and at the university, moreover, he turned out one of the jollicst fellows alive, always in for a spree, shocking his elders by his frivolous life, and composing what are still the most popular drinking songs in Germany. In due time his conversion came and stamped the young judge a bigot of the blackest hue, who consequently began to dabble in theology, and took up theological jurisprudence under the consistory. Since his accession to the ministry his tyranny has been intolerable, every where except in his own bureau and toward his immediate subordinates, to whom he has been a kind and considerate master. But over school and church he has tyrannized like an inquisitor-general, keeping the school regulations in narrow bounds, and turning out, whenever he could, any theologian or teacher whose views did not harmonize with his own. This was the easier for him, as whatever BISMARCK might think—who is his junior as a Minister—the King subscribed fully to the Muhler doctrines. Moreover, the Prussian constitution is still too new and imperfect to contain any special enactments on educational and religious administration. Only as it may appear, VON MUHLER'S veneration has shown itself to be more for the gown than for the tenet; he has befriended Catholic and Protestant priests alike, provided only they were strict disciplinarians and kept their flocks in spiritual subjection. What injured MUHLER as much as anything were the revelations made public about a year ago concerning the subordination in which he stood to his wife, who independently administered the art department, and even in other matters brought a paramount influence to bear upon her spouse. As a parliamentary man King WILLIAM could not have chosen a fitter servant than HEINRICH VON MUHLER, who is a fluent orator and a specious reasoner, and moreover a most obstinate dissentant. There was no cause so hopelessly bad but he could find something to say in its favor, and marshal his arguments so cleverly as to hit some weak point in the hostile phalanx. BISMARCK and ROON met the Interals with the brute force of an obstinate will, but MUHLER and LIPPE were never so hard up for reasons as to have need to resort to such means, yet they never gave in.

THE MINISTER'S RETIREMENT.

The time when such men were required now belongs to the past. With Koniggratz and Sedan behind him BISMARCK can rule the country without brute oppression. Thus MUHLER has become unnecessary. He owes his fall—next to his own unfortunate legislation—to BISMARCK himself. The education bill and the proposed conscience clause were the hairs that broke the camel's back. MUHLER tried twice to devise an Education bill to please BISMARCK, and failed both times. M. REICHERSPERGER'S motion and the Brammberg case seemed to have compelled the Cabinet to concede a conscience clause, absolving Ultramontane pupils from attending "Old Catholic" instruction, and vice versa. M. MUHLER felt that this necessarily must lead to the extension of the same privilege to Protestant schools, and so that would destroy all religious discipline, he tendered his resignation, which his colleagues unkindly indorsed, and His Majesty granted with marks of favor, promising the retiring servant that he will avail himself of his excellent services again before long. Thus MUHLER is gone only for a time. Meanwhile regnicoli in pace! You cannot imagine to what general rejoicings the event has given rise. Throughout Germany there is hardly a paper which does not triumph over it as an enthusiastically as if a new victory had been gained over the French. Only the personal of the Cultus Ministry shed a tear of regret, and, to console their departing master, have presented him with a handsome Bible, richly clasped and set with gold.

THE PRESUMPTIVE SUCCESSOR.

Several public men of note have been named as successors—among them the famous historian, MOMMSEN, who would have been extremely popular; the Redessen Minister TOLLY; the Curator of the Strasbourg University, VON ROGGENBACH; the former Curator of the Russian University of Dorpat, Count KEYSERLINGK; and Dr. FALCK, a German jurist, noted for his administrative talent. The competition soon became narrowed to the two last-named; and now it is semi-officially announced that His Majesty has another high appointment in store for Count KEYSERLINGK; so Dr. FALCK seems the man, and is designated as such by public opinion. He has had several interviews with the Emperor, and his final appointment is affirmed to be dependent only on the question of Dr. LEONHARDT, the Minister of Justice, who is seriously ill. Dr. FALCK'S appointment gives general popular. The Portfolio-Only Observation notes this as a "blunder," which seems to [illegible]

JAPANESE AFFAIRS.

Japanese Money and Money Matters—The Mikado's Advance Toward Civilization—Japan Awakening from her Long Sleep.

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Japanese Embassy are on the way to the East, in [illegible] Japan has ever sent abroad, not only as to the persons constituting it, but as regards the objects with which it is clothed. We understand that the Embassy is to visit all countries which maintain treaty relations with Japan, and is authorized to allow treaties revision upon a more liberal basis. Thus the Embassy visits this country first in an evidence of the high regard which the Japanese entertain for us and for our institutions. It is something remarkable that Japan, one of the oldest nations of the earth, which has been in a Rip Van Winkle sleep, so far as the outside world is concerned, ever since its birth, should now, upon its first awakening, come and sit at the feet of the youngest of nations, and that one possessing a form of government which, in its very essence, is antagonistic to its own. This is not done from impulse, for the Japanese are not given to impulse, nor has Japan, upon awakening from her long sleep, seized upon the first evidences of civilization which came to her hand, and taken them to her bosom, without due consideration. On the contrary, she courts our friendship after long and careful study, after having sent her ablest men to live among us, and to learn those arts which have made us a nation worthy of being copied. Upon the reports made by those who have been among us, Japan has asked our aid in introducing within her borders some of the fundamental principles which govern us. Already, prominent Americans have been called to take part in the administration of the progressive government which is being formed there, and the present Embassy comes among us to get still more ideas, and to make better arrangements for free intercourse between these two great peoples. We cannot look upon the struggle now going on in Japan between the old and the new—the dying out of semi-barbarism and the grasping for a higher civilization—without extending to her all our sympathies.

The Embassy which was here a year ago paid us the compliment not only of adopting many of our ideas, but of carrying off some of our people to set them working in Japan. But the most important thing adopted by them was our system of finance and currency in place of their own. It will be remembered that before visiting this country that Embassy, at the head of which was one of their principal officers, visited Europe. The financial systems of Europe were carefully studied, and the Embassy had resolved upon adopting that of England in preference to any other they had examined. The Bank of England notes especially took their fancy, and after much consideration it was determined to pattern after them. So fully impressed did the Japanese become in favor of the Bank of England notes, that they commenced negotiations with bank-note companies for the engraving and printing of similar notes for their country. But before concluding any contracts they came to this country, in spite of all John Bull could do to prevent them. Englishmen were jealous of their coming here at all, and especially before they were committed to their financial system. This, of course, was not so much from a special desire to do that particular work—for which they prepared specimens—as to secure the closer relations between the two governments which would necessarily follow. Of so much importance was this considered that even some of the most prominent English statesmen endeavored to persuade the Japanese to close their contracts with the designers, engravers, printers and paper makers. But the Japanese were determined to visit this country first, notwithstanding they were persuaded in their own minds that they would return and accept the propositions made.

And come they did. We all remember how faithfully the Washington correspondents recorded the many visits which the Embassy made to the Treasury Department, and the importance which the same correspondents attached to these visits. But the Embassy's study of American finance were not confined simply to viewing the means whereby our system was carried into effect, but they sought for and obtained all the printed information on the subject which could be reached, and consulted with the best of our financiers in reference thereto. The result was that, notwithstanding they were still pressed by English agents, they discarded the English ideas, and determined to copy our system of finance and our currency. This resolved upon, the Embassy returned home, leaving several of its members in this country to carry out the details of the arrangement so far as the manufacture of bonds and paper currency was concerned. They had mastered the metal currency system, and, taking that with them, proceeded at once to put it into practical operation. As a consequence, Japan has new gold, silver and copper coin, made after the manner of our own. It is only a few weeks—scarcely two months—since these were put in circulation, but is reported that they have already become popular, and are much preferred to their oblong metal currency.

In adopting this new currency the Japanese have based it upon our decimal system, taking our dollar as their unit. Thus the lowest denomination of their gold coin is "one yen," equal to one dollar. There are then gold coins of the denomination of two, five, ten and twenty yens. The silver coin is called "sen," the denominations being five, ten, twenty and fifty sens, the lower denomination being equal to five cents of our currency. The copper coinage is one sen, equal to the one-hundredth part of one yen, one-half sen, equal to the two-hundredth part of one yen, and one rin, equal to the one-thousandth part of one yen. These low denominations are absolutely necessary, in that land of cheap commodities and cheap labor.

The intrinsic value of these coins will be seen from the following tables, exhibiting the amount of alloy to each coin:

GOLD COINAGE OF JAPAN.

Name of Coin.	Weight in Grammes.	Pure Gold Weight in Troy Grains.	Pure Gold Weight in Troy Grammes.	Stand'd Weight in Troy Grammes.

These silver coins are legal tender only for an amount not exceeding ten yens in any payment.

There is still another silver coin used for commercial purposes of about the value of an old Mexican dollar, but which is not legal tender. The following table shows its intrinsic value:

The last syllable "gin" is pronounced hard, like the first syllable of the word "guinea." The copper coins are not legal tender in any sums. All these coins are made similar to our own, stamped and milled, and are inscribed with Japanese characters. Those who have seen them speak of them as being very pretty coins and of excellent workmanship.

While those of the old Embassy were employed in their own country in making and putting in circulation the new metallic coin, the agents whom they left behind were not idle in the preparation of bonds and paper currency. They made many visits to the Treasury Department, and were days in studying the various processes deemed necessary to protect our greenbacks and our greenback. The bonds [illegible] upon and work upon them as being passed as rapidly as possible. They are fashioned after our own bonds, and are substantially of the same purport, pledging the Japanese Government to pay certain sums at certain times, with interest, in consideration of money loaned it. One of the Japanese agents, named MORIYAMA, has been in the City for the past ten months, superintending the work, and is a daily visitor at the office of the company. He, as well as the officers of the company, are exercising the greatest care lest some of the designs should be made public, and counterfeits put on the market as soon as the genuine bonds are issued. Should such a horrible thing occur, the results would be most disastrous to the company, while the only atonement MACASHIMA could offer would lay in opening his stomach after the most approved method of hari-kari. This would be a sad loss, for MACASHIMA is a youthful Japanese of great intelligence, great vigor and enterprise. He is a thorough believer in the old saying, "Young Japan." He is an earnest student of our language, customs and institutions, has a great admiration of the American people and character, and is prepared to see Japan Americanized to the fullest extent.

In recent conversation which the writer had with MACASHIMA, he mentioned the fact that a newspaper for the people had recently been started in Yeddo, the first ever printed in Japan. Heretofore their printing has been confined to the issuing of books and an official gazette. Nothing had been given the masses in the way of a newspaper until since the return of the Embassy of a year ago. While in this country the members of that body saw and were deeply impressed, by the great influence which the Press of this country exerted upon the masses. They also comprehended what a powerful engine it would be in the hands of the progressive Japanese in overcoming the prejudices of their people, and educating them up to the higher civilization proposed for them. So upon their return a weekly newspaper was started at Yeddo, and it has already achieved a large circulation. Fortunately for it, the Mikado has conceived progressive ideas, so that the paper is not brought in such violent contact with the Government as would otherwise be the case. It is therefore at liberty to combat popular ignorance, prejudice and custom, and this it is doing with energy and skill. Among the first things which it attacked was the outlandish costume of the Japanese, advocating the adoption of the costume of the Americans. The paper is printed in Japanese characters, rather than in such characters as are at present used, which are a combination of Japanese and Chinese. The Japanese language proper has been "ruined by Chinese cheap labor," otherwise, by the introduction of the Chinese language among the masses to such an extent that in many instances their own words have been entirely supplanted, and pure Japanese would not be understood by many of the natives of that country. This is the great reason why they are so anxious to learn our language, and are now teaching it extensively in their schools. By that means they will secure a uniform language for conversation purposes, and one which is spoken by that nation which is destined to come into such intimate relations with them. It will be but a few years before English printed newspapers will be published in Yeddo, and Yankee journalists called upon to furnish the skill and the enterprise which shall give to the Japanese everyday "all the news of the world" in a condensed form.

The new Embassy comes here for the purpose of strengthening the ties which bind the two countries together, and it will be our fault if we do not reap substantial benefit from their visit. As this country should control the trade with Japan, so should New-York control the greater part of that trade, as her unequaled commercial advantages entitle her to do. Our business men should organize in some manner, without delay, to look out for our interests.

PERILS OF THE RAIL.

The Pacific Express Thrown Off the Track by a Snow-Pile—Erie Water Secured by Frost.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SUSQUEHANNA DEPOT, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1871.

The severe storm of Saturday greatly affected travel on the Erie Railway. Perilous at all times, the calling of railroaders becomes doubly so in such weather as that of Saturday. There were no serious accidents on this division, although the Pacific express, No. 1, had a very narrow escape from a fearful disaster near Lordville. The train was about an hour and a half late from the Eastern Division, and was running as fast as possible at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. It was three miles from Lordville, when, in rounding a curve, the driving-wheels of the locomotive were thrown from the track by the snow that had drifted on the rails. The spot is a very dangerous one, there being but one track, and that built on an embankment fifteen or twenty feet high, and not more than four feet wider than the gauge. The engineer at once reversed the motion, and sifted by the snow, stopped the train before any of the cars were thrown off. The spot where the accident happened is one of the wildest along the Division, and the dreariness was increased by the driving storm. As soon as the train stopped the passengers came pouring out in the snow and sleet to ascertain what was the matter. The conductor, CHARLES GRAVES, at once sent a messenger to the nearest station to telegraph for "wreckers," and in due time a locomotive appeared on the scene, with tools and workmen. Before the engine could be replaced on the track a portion of the rails had to be adjusted under the drivers, and little by little the wheels were run back upon the rails. At last the track was again laid in position, and at about 11 o'clock at night the train was in readiness to depart on its way, with its load of almost famished passengers. From 4 o'clock until the time of starting, they had been "snowbound" in the midst of a forest, and the only thing eatable in reach was a few boiled eggs, which an enterprising boy from a farm-house about a mile away brought over in his basket, and sold at his own price. He had not been enough. The train was eight hours late at this station, and lost four more between here and Elmira.

Owing to the severe weather, the water-pipes which supply the water tanks and locomotives at this station have been frozen for some days. The engines have been obliged to fetch water from Deposit, Starrucca and Great Bend, several miles, and it has also been carried in pails from the river to all locomotive boilers. Work in the shops has been suspended. Night and day since Wednesday last, workmen have been engaged in endeavoring to thaw the pipes, and it was not until today that there has been any show of success. Nearly a hundred cords of wood have been used in keeping fires on the pipes, which being a very dangerous proceeding, a watchman posted in the streets through the night to look out for fires. The Company will, no doubt, hereafter get their supply of water from the river instead of from the reservoir.

A TERRIBLE BEAR FIGHT.

A Bear and Her Two Cubs Attack a Pennsylvania Farmer's Cattle—Cattle Combine Against the Varmint and Kill Her.

The Williamsport (Penn.) Gazette of the latest date tells the following:

"A gentleman reached Williamsport on Friday evening last, from a "logging camp" in Potter County, where he has been for five weeks, who relates the particulars of an exciting encounter with an old bear and two cubs. It appears that a man named JOHN ELMAKER and his wife, had made a small clearing in Jackson township. They have a comfortable log-cabin, a small barn, several horned cattle and a few pigs. About 5 o'clock on the evening of Jan. 31, Mr. ELMAKER heard a great commotion among his cattle and pigs at the barn. On rushing out to ascertain the cause of alarm, he was not surprised on finding that an old bear and two cubs had attacked a yearling calf. The cattle were snorting and bellowing at a fearful rate, while the pigs were squealing as hurry and fast they could to be dispatched every minute. The bear had thrown the calf down and was proceeding to drag it out of the yard. The cubs were running around snapping their teeth and uttering half-suppressed growls of delight at the prospect of a "good square meal."

Mr. ELMAKER returned to the house, informed his wife, and made preparations to attack the bears. He mounted his ride, while his wife armed herself with a long sandled double-bitted axe. Thus armed they advanced to the attack. The bears, made bold and ferocious by rapacity, did not seem inclined to give up their prey. Rising upon her haunches the old bear showed fight, and struck the foremost pig a terrible blow with her paw. Mr. ELMAKER raised his rifle and fired at the black monster, thinking that if she were killed the cubs could easily be dispatched or driven off. But owing to the excitement under which he was laboring, he missed his aim and only broke the left fore paw of the animal. With a fierce growl of rage, mingled by the pain ful wound, the old bear rushed at her assailants, followed by the cubs. They stood their ground for a few minutes, Mr. ELMAKER clubbing his rifle, while his wife cut one of the cubs severely in the shoulder with the ax. The rage of the animals became fearful, and the great danger of facing them at once became apparent. Retreating rapidly to the house, they barred the door and prepared to defend themselves. Mr. ELMAKER succeeded in reloading his rifle, and firing through the window, killed a cub. The old bear now attempted to climb the log-house, but owing to her broken paw was unable to do so. Another shot from the rifle wounded her severely in the head, when she set up the most hideous howls of rage. Failing to get another shot at them, the parties inside remained in a state of siege, prepared to resist any further attack. The animals loitered around until midnight, which they retired and all became still. On making a search in the morning the old bear was found dead about six hundred yards from the house, and the cub lay where it fell in the early part of the engagement. The other had disappeared in the forest. The two dead bears were secured and dressed—the old one weighed 250 pounds, and the cub 120. The ELMAKERS have a sufficiency of bear meat to last them for the balance of the season. The skins will be brought to Williamsport soon and offered for sale. The cubs caused much talk in the neighborhood for several days. It is unlikely that a bear so old, bold, but their bravery on this occasion was caused, no doubt, by the gravings of hunger. The calf was badly lacerated by the teeth and claws of the animal, but will recover. Mrs. ELMAKER says she is ready for the next raid."

A MURDERER'S END.

Execution of a Negro Man in Charleston, S. C.—Reprieve of His Alleged Accomplice at the Gallows—Details of the Ghastly Scene.

From the Charleston (S. C.) News, Feb. 8.

SAMUEL WHITE, the negro man convicted at the last term of the Court of General Sessions of the murder of W. B. FIGES, depot agent at Oakley Station, on the North-eastern Railroad, yesterday paid the penalty of his crime by forfeiting his life upon the gallows. The horrible spectacle, as usual, seemed to have a strange fascination for the multitude, and the yard of the jail-yard were besieged at an early hour by crowds of men and boys anxious to see the execution. The hanging, however, was, in a measure private, hardly more than 100 persons being the officials being present. Admittance could be obtained only by a pass from the Sheriff. The weather was dark, damp and cold, and masses of threatening clouds throughout the face of the sun, throwing a gloom over the faces of the shivering spectators.

At the hour of 11, the Sheriff ascended the tower, where the felons are confined, and found WHITE in the corridor prepared for his doom. His countenance was of an ashy, sickening hue; but he listened with attention to the words of Rev. D. J. QUINLEY, of the Cathedral, who was his religious attendant in the terrible hour. BALDWIN had not been informed of the commutation of his sentence by the Governor, and, under the impression that he, too, was going out to be hanged, was brought to WHITE'S cell, where the two prisoners confronted each other. BALDWIN here asseverated his innocence, and repeated that he had nothing whatever to do with the murder. Upon being interrogated, as to BALDWIN, WHITE confirmed this statement. As to himself, WHITE declared that he had not killed Mr. FIGES, but that the man who committed the crime had escaped. Being asked who this man was, he replied that he (WHITE) was going to be for time dead, and there was no use in further talking about it. He then seemed to be left alone with the priest during his last moments.

The prisoners accordingly were left with the priest, and the Sheriff and his officers descending to the yard, proceeded with the final preparations. There was little to be done, the rope, weight, was in the tower, and a strong one-inch rope was passed through the top piece, and tied securely to the weight. The other end was drawn down to the middle between the posts. A small hempen rope, about a third of an inch in diameter, was quickly fashioned into a running noose, and fastened to the top of the cross-bar. Meanwhile, the prisoner was drawn up the steps, to the required height, and having been again replaced, everything awaited the coming of the doomed man. In the meantime the spectators gathered and house-tops had become crowded with curious gazers. Among the spectators was the father-in-law of the murdered FIGES, who had come down and wanted "to see the thing done." Those within the inclosure were now marshaled to the right and left of the gallows, and soon a subdued murmur told that the prisoner was coming. He was attended by the priest, and was neatly dressed in a white shirt and pair of brown pants. He wore no hat or coat, and his shirt-collar was thrown back, revealing his muscular neck. He walked with a firmness which belied the pallor of his face. On arriving at the foot of the gallows he was confronted by the Sheriff, MAHER, who read the sentence of the Court, and telling him that he was about to be executed for the crime, asked if he had anything to say. WHITE, who had a chew of tobacco in his mouth, cleared his throat, and, with a shake of his head, said he had "nothing." Upon the priest, who had knelt upon the

COMMENTS ON THE DAY'S AFFAIRS.

B. G. and the President.

From the Pittsburg Dispatch.

President GRANT has done about as well as any President in enlarging New-York. He may have done this carelessly, and so not well. As to the strength of GRANT as a candidate, we do not believe with the Tribune for a moment. No fact has been made on any side which proves they were not distinctly candidates for nomination. But let the President stand on his popularity as GRANT has and does, and there is little reason why their should not be renominated will be discussed, than have been against him.

THE SOREHEAD OF PENTON.

Milwaukee Sentinel.

A whining little shop-keeper of a politician in a village of Western New-York, by name PENTON, has succeeded in reaching the Senate of the United States. This position is an exalted one. We should suppose it might satisfy the ambition of a very ordinary man. There are many citizens of New-York, and, for that matter, of other States, far abler than he, who would gladly enter into a pact with the goddess of Fortune, if she would take up a Senatorship, if they could be secured a place in the greatest political body of this country. Not so with PENTON.

PENTON is opposed to the Administration of Gen. GRANT. He would gladly contribute to the defeat of the present incumbent in the next Presidential Convention of the Republican party. He does not deny that the affairs of Government have been generally well managed since the White House has been occupied by the hero of Vicksburg. He has brains enough to understand that the public debt has been rapidly reduced. He knows that taxation has been decidedly lessened since Andy Johnson left the Presidential chair. He is well aware that the figures demonstrate an economical administration of the Government. He comprehends that President GRANT found many abuses incorporated by long usage with the administration of affairs. He is not ignorant that the Executive has labored with ability, honesty and good sense to correct these same abuses. He doubtless sees that the mass of Republicans in the United States, who expect no Federal patronage, who hold no office, are contented with the Administration, and desire the renomination of GRANT. Notwithstanding all these facts, Senator PENTON considers it so to cripple the Executive that Federal officeholders actively defend the Administration which they represent. PENTON complains because the President does not fill every man his friends, and thus gratuitously attempts to turn his name to cripple the Executive.

What does the little Senator mean? Is he, too, an aspirant for Presidential honors? What has he ever done to merit the confidence of the people of this great country? Has he ever longed the economy of the nation on the field of death? Has he ever shown a patriotic any measure of return? Has he ever shown any of the qualities of able statesmanship? Has he even a respectable knowledge of Federal legislation? Does he understand the history of mankind, and bring the wisdom of a sage scholarship to the solution of intricate public policies? Has he reversed in the laws of political economy? Does the rare and high gift of impassioned eloquence enable him to move men in the interest of civilization? Has he the power of logic and sound reason to give him a commanding influence in legislative debate? If he has done none of these, then why is he usual heard so loudly in public affairs?

TEXT CURIOUS.

Washington Star.

The readers of the New-York Tribune—a paper which never loses an opportunity to give a dig to chroniclers of society affairs—must have been very much surprised yesterday to see something more than half a column of that journal devoted to a record of matters pertaining to a party given to Mr. HORACE GREELEY on Saturday evening. It seems to be as much as if the Zero's wicked day, that it makes all the difference imaginable whose ox is gored. Human nature is very curious.

THE BEST MAN.

Syracuse Journal.

We are told by the New-York Tribune that the editor of that paper opposes the renomination of President GRANT, not simply because Mr. GREELEY is in favor of his "one-term" dogma, but because he looks upon GRANT as a weak candidate. Suppose, for a moment, that Mr. GREELEY is sincere in the expression of that opinion of the President's strength; put out of the question for the moment the fact that the Tribune has been used as an instrument to foster and increase dissatisfaction in Republican ranks in reference to President GRANT; leave out of view that other fact that Mr. GREELEY has left the State of New-York unrepresented in the call for a National Republican Convention—that he has abandoned the voice of the Republican Party in this State from which he has imparted collected all these considerations, and yet neither Mr. GREELEY nor any of those who claim to think as he thinks, can centre on any candidate in the place of GRANT. Other Republicans undoubtedly there are who would be an honor to the high office, and who are entitled to it; but it is as plain as sunlight that with the people, and as a President for the people, GRANT is the man for the next Presidential term.

"SO DO ALL THE OTHERS."

Oswego Daily Press.

The Democratic Tribune is at last dragged into the gulf of corruption into which it has, with yells of delight, pushed so many unfortunates. It was sworn to before Judge BREDDERS' Grand Jury that THE TRIBUNE had stated to witnesses that it had paid $2,000 to the Tribune, in June, 1868, to prevent that paper from continuing the publication of the names of firmen who were being paid under the act of March 6, 1868, as also the amounts received by the firemen. FIELDS stated, as his reason for desiring the publication withheld, that many of the claims were fraudulent, and he did not want the effort made public. The Tribune denies the accusation, brought against it—but so do all the others that are accused.

Terre Haute, Ind., Daily Express.

Should the New-York Tribune continue on its present track, it bids fair to contest with the World the position of leading Democratic journal.

AN ABSURD LIAR.

Newark Evening Journal.

The New-York Tribune not only "keeps a pill-box" in its home office, but employs a professional liar as correspondent at all points where lying can be made serviceable in the furtherance of its avowed object—the disorganization and desired defeat of the Republican Party. The Washington correspondence of that paper is a noticeable feature of this sort, wherein all sorts of slanders and misrepresentations of the National Administration and its friends are concocted and scattered broadcast for a purpose too obvious to require either explanation or comment. Latterly a similar business of a lighter kind, of course, on a much smaller and far more contemptible scale, has been established at Trenton. It is in charge of a youth of tender years and limited experience in the business assigned him, but to whom lying is as natural as breathing. Now, we hold that if there be any merit in lying per se, it depends altogether upon the skill of the performance. A smart lie, artistically devised and persistently stuck to, while it may not challenge the highest admiration of moralists, at least reflects distinction upon its author, upon the originator. But this youth is to fortune and to fame unknown when he takes the contract of manufacturing Republican corruption at Trenton. He is a bungler beyond all his compeers. His lies without rhyme or reason; and his falsehoods are so shallow and absurd in their conception and execution as to render them abortive for mischief. To be proved a liar is bad enough, but to be convicted of fool, pure and simple, is a depth of degradation to which it has been reserved for the aforesaid Trenton correspondent of the Tribune to first descend.

Suggested by What Must Now be Called the Great American Sideshow.

From the Hartford Courant, Feb. 7.

The city of Boston, the national hub, has just made a discovery of its own attractiveness that surprises even the most enthusiastic prophets of its future greatness. It appears that the railroads leading to that city having made up their annual reports, show by the facilitivity of figures that 772,129 more persons were carried to the hub than from it during the year 1871. It is confessed that but few of these come to Boston to leave the city as European visitors where occasionally call from the East and the conclusion is that they must be in the city still. The great question now is, where are they? No city but Boston could exhibit three-quarters of a million of American citizens and not be conscious of it at the time, but all efforts to find them have thus far proved vain. The surveyors have so far proved vain. The surveyors with their limited natural philosophy, spent years in trying to find how the rivers of the world daily carry all the water into the ocean and yet not make it overflow; finally, they discovered that the clouds carried the water back, a conclusion as fine as any carried in the dark ages. The figures were carried. History does not repeat itself, but it seems to be certainly probable that we must now look for water, and we have our modern philosophers puzzling over the matter, whether, when rainwater is swell in size of the water supply of Boston? To the

NO. 25 NASSAU-ST.

A FIRST-CLASS NEW-YORK SECURITY AT A LOW PRICE.

The undersigned offer for sale the FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the Syracuse and Chenango Valley Railroad, at 95 and accrued interest.

This road runs from the City of Syracuse to Smith's Valley, where it unites with the New-York Midland Railroad, thus connecting that city by a direct line of road with the Metropolis.

Its length is forty-two miles, its COST ABOUT $40,000 PER MILE, and it is MORTGAGED FOR LESS THAN $12,000 PER MILE; the balance of the funds required for its construction having been raised by subscription to the capital stock.

The road approaches completion. It traverses a populous and fertile district of the State, which insures it a paying business, and it is under the control of gentlemen of high character and ability. Its bonds possess all the requisites of an inviting investment. They are amply secured by a mortgage for LESS THAN ONE-THIRD THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY. They pay SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD INTEREST, and are offered five per cent. below par. The undersigned confidently recommend them to all classes of investors.

CHICAGO AND ALTON RAILROAD.

State of New-York.

7 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE GOLD BONDS,

THIRTY YEARS TO RUN, AND ISSUED FOR $20,000 PER MILE.

This road forms the shortest and most direct route from the great anthracite and semi-bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania into the central part of this State, and will form a connection with the New-York Central Road, which is owned or controlled by the Vanderbilts. Traversing, as it does, the finest and most productive agricultural district, generally known as the "GARDEN OF THE GREAT WEST," its local traffic will be large, but its greatest source of revenue will be from its coal business. The road is being rapidly built, and will be in active operation during this year. From our knowledge of this enterprise, and after the most thorough investigation, we most confidently recommend the Bonds as a safe investment. We offer, for the present, the Bonds at 90 and accrued interest in currency.

LEONARD, SHELDON & FOSTER,

SECOND MORTGAGE 8 PER CENT. CONVERTIBLE BONDS

OF THE

Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railway.

We offer a limited amount of these bonds, which at present price we consider a very desirable investment, as THE ROAD IS IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION AND EARNING NET MORE THAN THE INTEREST ON ALL ITS BONDS. The business of the road is rapidly increasing; over 1,000 miles of new roads are now building, connecting with, and controlled entirely in the interest of, this road, all of which will be completed at an early day. THESE NEW ROADS, IT IS EXPECTED, WILL ADD AT LEAST FIFTY PER CENT. TO THE EARNINGS OF THE COMPANY.

We also buy and sell the First Mortgage 7 per cent Gold bonds of the

INDIANAPOLIS, BLOOMINGTON AND WESTERN ROADS.

And those of the

PEORIA AND ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY.

STOCKS and BONDS bought and sold on commission.

Accounts of banks, bankers and merchants received.

Four per cent. interest allowed on daily balances.
